LENOX, MASS. — Audiences at the Tanglewood Music Festival over the week-end who heard Rudolf Serkin in a virtuoso performance of Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto for Piano, No. 5" yesterday afternoon, were introduced to the brilliant conducting of William Steinberg of the Pitsburgh Symphony Orchestra in his first Berkshire appearance Saturday evening, and listened to a colorfully rich program of French contemporaries of Dr. Charles Munch at Friday night's concert. In addition, there was on Friday, the additonal pleasure of Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's first cellist, in the exquisitely, beautifully performed Saint-Saens "Violincello Concerto No. 1, in A minor."

The week-end audiences of 28,199, more than 1,200 ahead of the same week-end last year, included a rapt Sunday audience of 11,242 that came for Serkin. And they were not disappointed There was a noticeable note of expectancy in the Music Shed long before the appearance of the soloist who seemed to caress the piano as he played. At one point even a lone bird high in the trees above the weeping-willow to the west of the Shed joined with his own song, heard Serkin, and remained silent for the remainder of the concert. Serkin performed the Concerto as only Serkin can. It was an enthralled audience that listened through the gentle caressing of his playing and then through the full vigor of the pianist who lifted himself from his seat. There were the "bravos" one knew there would be and an ovation for Serkin, Dr. Munch, and the musicians of the Boston.

Performance of Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydin" was the perfect opener for the sunny, sultry Berkshire afternoon. It was followed by performance of Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" with its wide range of highly colorful music.

Relaxing

Yesterday afternoon the orchestra seemed to be relaxing with its conductor, Dr. Munch, compared to the work-out it received on Saturday evening under the direction of guest conductor, William Steinberg. Appearing with the Boston for the first time at Tanglewood and using no musical score throughout, Mr. Steinberg gave such masterful readings of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 8" and Bruckner's "Symphony No. 8" that one may be certain he will be invited back. With the exception of Mr. Ormandy, seldom have we seen a conductor "work" the Boston musicians as did Steinberg before 7,631. He conducted brilliantly, received a well-deserved ovation, and non-the-least of his admirers were the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra upon whom he exercised such tight control.

Dr. Munch's conducting of the program of French music for the Friday night concert made it a memorable experience. One glided delicately with him and the orchestra through the performance of Ravel's "La Valse" and all but got up to dance it. The performance of Honigger's "Symphony No. 5", written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, taxed the orchestra but the players did not falter. The open rehearsal on Saturday morning, with proceeds going to the Orchestra Pension Fund, drew 4,121.

Concerts this coming week-end will bring three conductors to the podium. Eugene Ormandy will conduct Beethoven and Bartok on Friday night when the "Eroica" and "Egmont Overture" will be heard. Pierre Monteux, in his second and final appearance of the summer, will conduct music of Wagner, Elgar, and Brahms on Saturday evening with Leon Fleisher as soloist in the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2". Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch will conduct music of Rameau, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique", and a new work by Fine, "Symphony (1962)".

S.M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

AUG 6 1962

Music in Review: Berkshire Festival

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Rudolph Serkin drew a prolonged ovation for his performance of the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood before an audience of 11,242 persons.

The size of the audience was some indication of the affection that Serkin inspires among his admirers. His thoroughly dedicated musicianship and solid interpretative gifts are qualities that are always worthy of admiration and serve the music of Beethoven particularly well.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH opened his program with Brahms' "Haydn" Variations that use the so-called "St. Anthony Chorale," surely one of the noblest themes ever created. And it seems to this reviewer that Munch's reading of this work has mellowed with the years. Yesterday the music had an unhurried grace and tonal warmth that were eminently satisfying.

In dramatic contrast was Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6), a work that appears quite frequently on Munch's programs. Written to celebrate the 75th Anniversary of the orchestra and dedicated to Munch, it remains one of the most interesting contemporary symphonies.

* * *

THE COMPOSER'S orchestral mastery throughout this work is used with moving effect. Its constantly changing moods, its surging vitality, and a performance by the Boston Orchestra that underlined these qualities made this a memorable recreation of a favorite work of Munch's.

In Beethoven's popular piano concert, Mr. Serkin attacked the piano with a demonic attitude that made one almost fear that the instrument might not hold up under the impact. When this performer faces the piano he acquires the energy of a 20-year old and the persistence of a bird dog on the trail.

Even though the pianist had a few choppy spots and the tonal balance between piano and orchestra was sometimes off, the sheer vitality of this Beethoven performance was, overwhelming. And I have a sneaking suspicion that this was just about the way old Beethoven would have played it.

It would be a musical satisfaction and a delight to his many admirers, if Mr. Serkin could be encouraged to perform all of the Beethoven piano concerti in one season at Tanglewood.

A. W. Gifford Co
43 Lyman St. — RE 2-6513
Nites, Sun., Hols. ST 3-1122

KEYS
of
ALL TYPES
SAFES DOOR CHECKS
LOCKS REPAIRED SAFE EXPERTS

Since 1872

HAVE LIFT
HEAR LIST HOMES MOVE HOPES NEAR LAST NOTICE
LIFT

Words to Help You
Today's Dollar Dazzler

Get together with another set of words to obtain among others all you need for the Union's Dollar Dazzler prize page Wednesday. Keep this list handy when you work on the Dazzler

The average age of Volkswagen employees at the end of 1961 was 33.2 years.

Not appear summ... the expense involved.

Continued From Page 1

relaxed and beautifully toned performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5, popularly known as the "Emperor." We have heard Rudolph Serkin lavish far greater tone on works labeled more modestly than the "Emperor." Mr. Munch practically breathed with the pianist. Such perfectly coordinated accompaniment is not often achieved.

The audience was obviously entranced, for I can hear its applause in the press room some moments after the concerto's conclusion.

For some reason or other, vital statistics seem of paramount importance to many people. Thus we'll oblige with some, having to do with the week end. Audiences at the week-end concerts totaled 28,199. A year ago they totaled 26,914. Sunday's audience, one of the largest of the series, numbered 11,242. A year ago it numbered 8747. Thus far we are still ahead.

Trio Due Wednesday

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will present a concert of chamber music Wednesday evening. This promises to be more rewarding program-wise than some we have heard so far. The personnel of the trio comprises Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin; and Bernard Greenhouse, cello.

These artists are prime favorites at Tanglewood. The program on Wednesday evening will consist of Beethoven's Trio, op. 70, No. 1; Diamond's Trio; and [illegible] Trio op. 87.

BLANK PAGE

6TH. WEEK AUG. 6TH – AUG 12TH. '62

B TON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, August 10, at 8:00

EUGENE ORMANDY, Conductor

I OVEN — Overture to "Egmont," Op. 84

B OVEN — *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica"

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

Intermission

BARTÓK — Concerto for Orchestra

I. Andante non troppo; allegro vivace
II. Giuoco delle coppie: Allegro scherzando
III. Elegy: Andante non troppo
IV. Intermezzo interrotto: Allegretto
V. Finale: Presto

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, August 11, at 8:00

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

WAGNER — Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"

ELGAR — Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36

Enigma: Andante Variations:

I. "C.A.E." L'istesso tempo
II. "H.D.S.-P." Allegro
III. "R.B.T." Allegretto
IV. "W.M.B." Allegro di molto
V. "R.P.A." Moderato
VI. "Ysobel" Andantino
VII. "Troyte" Presto
VIII. "W.N." Allegretto
IX. "Nimrod" Moderato
X. "Dorabella-Intermezzo" Allegretto
XI. "G.R.S." Allegro di molto
XII. "B.G.N." Andante
XIII. "-Romanza" Moderato
XIV. "E.D.U."-Finale

Intermission

BRAHMS — *Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro appassionato
III. Andante
IV. Allegretto grazioso

Soloist: LEON FLEISHER

Mr. FLEISHER plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director

Berkshire Festival

Sunday Afternoon, August 12, 1962

Charles Munch has agreed, on the advice of his physician, to conserve his energies by taking a short rest from conducting. He expects, however, to conduct the concerts as announced for the remainder of the season.

Pierre Monteux has kindly offered to conduct this afternoon in his stead. Irving Fine will conduct his own Symphony.

The program follows:

BEETHOVEN — Overture to Leonore, No. 3, Op. 72

FINE — Symphony (1962)

I. Intrada: Andante quasi allegretto
II. Capriccio: Allegro con spirito
III. Ode: Grave

Intermission

TCHAIKOVSKY — *Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathétique"

I. Adagio; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

AUG 12 1962

Leon Kirchner to Conduct His Original Composition

Irving Fine's Symphony to Have Tanglewood Premiere This Afternoon in Music Shed

LENOX—The Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer, in the Music Shed at 2.30 p. m. today as the Berkshire Festival begins the seventh week of its eight-week season. Pierre Monteux will conduct Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," by Tchaikovsky to complete this afternoon's concert.

Mr. Monteux will substitute for Dr. Charles Munch who has been ordered by his physician to rest. Dr. Munch, scheduled to retire following the final concert of the Tanglewood season on Sunday, the 26th is expected to resume his conducting activities as scheduled Friday evening.

At the suggestion of Dr. Munch, Mr. Fine consented to conduct the Boston Symphony this afternoon in his own composition.

Composer to Conduct

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Dr. Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Saturday's 8 p. m. concert. Saturday's program and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood (Aug. 10) are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program Friday Dr. Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own Sinfonia. Mr. Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and is presently at Harvard University as professor of music.

Dr. Munch is due to conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5 in D Minor ("Reformation"). This concert will conclude with "Harold in Italy," Symphony with Viola Solo by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Mr. Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B flat Minor, at the Berkshire Festival concert Saturday evening. Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat Minor, Op. 111 by Prokofiev.

Adele Addison Soloist

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a. m. Saturday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the concert next Sunday with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra. Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Graffman will play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

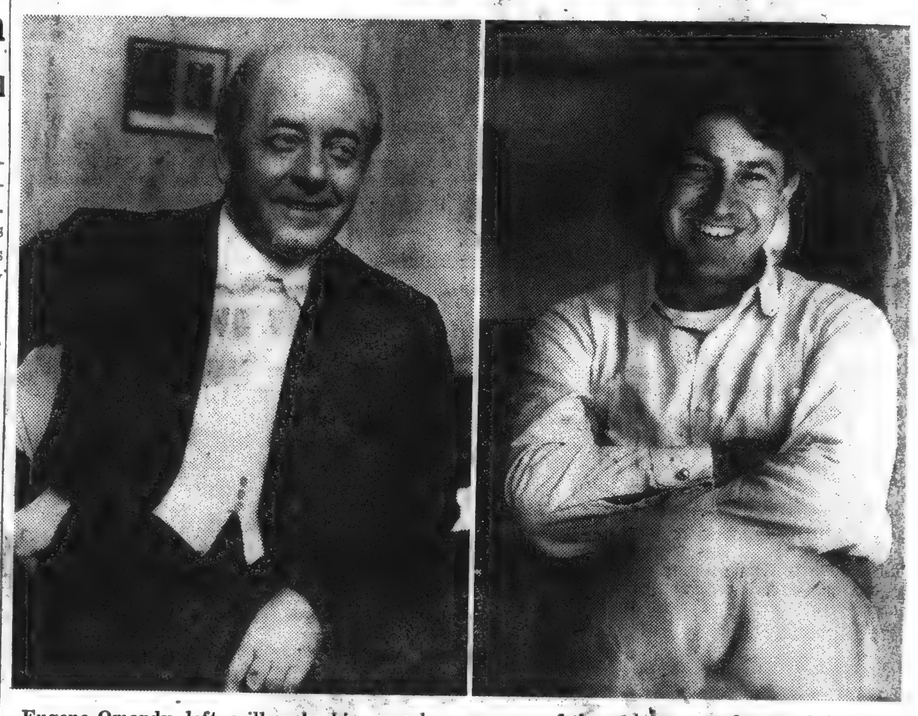
The Nova Arte Trio will be heard at the Wednesday chamber music concert in the theater. Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the assisting artists in a program consisting of the Flute Sonata, Op. 94 by Prokofiev, Mozart's Divertimento, K. 563, and Brahms' Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

Six events are open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center during the seventh week, beginning with the concert by the Conductor's Orchestra in the Music Shed Monday at 8 p. m. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will present a concert Tuesday at 8 p. m. On Thursday at 4 p. m. there will be a concert of chamber music by the students in the Chamber Music Hall, and that evening at 8 in the theater the Tanglewood Choir will present a program of choral music. The Aspects of Music seminar will be held Friday at 3.15 p. m. at which Lukas Foss will give a lecture and demonstration on his Time Cycle. Next Sunday's student chamber music program will be given at 10 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

This week's schedule at Tanglewood follows:

SUNDAY, AUG. 12
10 a. m., Music Hall
BMC Chamber Music
2.30 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Pierre Monteux, Conductor
Leonore Overture No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Symphony (1962) ..... Fine
Conducted by composer
Symphony No. 6 ..... Tchaikovsky
MONDAY, AUG. 13
8 p. m., Music Shed
Conductor's Orchestra
TUESDAY, AUG. 14
8 p. m., Music Shed
BMC Orchestra
WEDNESDAY, AUG. 15
8 p. m., Theater
Nova Arte Trio
Graffman & Dwyer
Flute Sonata, Op. 94 ..... Prokofiev
Divertimento, K 563 ..... Mozart
Piano Quartet, Op. 26 ..... Brahms
THURSDAY, AUG. 16
4 p. m., Music Hall
BMC Chamber Music
8 p. m., Theater
Tanglewood Choir
FRIDAY, AUG. 17
3.15 p. m., Music Hall
Aspects of Music
Lukas Foss, "Time Cycle"
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Sinfonia ..... Kirchner
Conducted by composer
Harold in Italy (de Pasquale) ..Berlioz
Symphony No. 5 ..... Mendelssohn
SATURDAY, AUG. 18
10 a. m., Music Shed
BSO Open Rehearsal
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Eugene Ormandy, Conductor
Classical Symphony, Op. 25 .. Prokofiev
Symphony No. 6 ..... Prokofiev
Piano Concerto No. 1 (Istomin) .Tchaikovsky

Tanglewood Conductors



Eugene Omandy, left, will make his second appearance of the season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening at Tanglewood. Leon Kirchner, right, will conduct the orchestra in his own composition, Sinfonia, Friday at 8 p. m in the Music Shed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826

AUG 3 1962

LEON FLEISHER will be soloist with Pierre Monteaux and the Boston orchestra at Tanglewood in a performance of Brahm's Piano Concerto No. 2, Saturday evening, Aug. 11 at 8 o'clock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350

AUG 9 1962

LEON FLEISHER will be the soloist with Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in a performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening, Aug. 11, at 8 o'clock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 6 1962

Ormandy Conducts Friday

Whitestone

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, a summer resident of Monterey, will be guest conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at 8 in the Music Shed. He also will appear Aug. 12.

TORN PAGE

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
1 3 1962

IRVING FINE, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center and now a member of the faculty there, conducted his new symphony at the BSO concert at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, sharing the conducting duties with Pierre Monteux in the absence of Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days.

Whitestone

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 14 1962

PIANO SOLOIST Leon Fle[illegible]ight, joins Pierre Monteux, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra[illegible]ay night's concert at Tanglewood, to acknowledge ovation extended them[illegible]r's performance of Brahms' Concerto.

Whitestone

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CITIZEN REGISTER
August 7, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TOWN NEWS
August 7, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
MAMARONECK TIMES
August 7, 1962
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
PORTS HERALD STATESMAN
Thursday, August 8, 1962

Conductors Slated For Festival

The Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., announces the following conductors for the Festival's sixth week.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra on Friday, starting at 8:00 p. m. Pierre Monteux will conduct Saturday evening, also starting at 8 o'clock. On Sunday, Charles Munch, music director of the Festival, will conduct the concert which begins at 2:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 10 1962

Berkshire Hills Conference Will Honor Dr. Munch

The Berkshire Hills Conference, in a ceremony in which two Williamstown residents are scheduled to have a part, will honor Charles Munch before he retires Aug. 26 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The conference, county promotional agency, will present a silver tray to Dr. Munch. Its inscription says it is given "In appreciation of your contribution to the cultural, social and economic welfare of Berkshire County."

Ernest J. Brundage, retiring president of the Conference, and Peter Guille, director of the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, both of Williamstown, will be in the delegation that will make the presentation. It also will include Lawrence K. Miller, editor of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, and John V. Geary, executive secretary of the Conference. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be present to represent the orchestra.

The presentation was to have taken place tomorrow morning at the close of the orchestra's weekly open rehearsal in the Music Shed at Tanglewood but it was postponed for a week when it was announced yesterday that Dr. Munch, exhausted from the rigorous schedule of the Berkshire Festival, had been ordered by his physician to rest for several days. He reportedly is in a Pittsfield hospital.

Dr. Munch's retirement as music director of the orchestra will be effective with the conclusion of the last concert in the Berkshire Festival series Sunday, Aug. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997
AUG 3 1962

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH TIMES
W. 25,234
AUG 3 1962

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 1962

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D: 283,195 SAT. 106,930
AUG 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,657
AUG 7 1962

8-62

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 6, 1962

Ormandy Will Lead Boston Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Music Festival concert Friday at 8 p.m. The program will include Beethoven's "Egmont Overture" and "Symphony No. 3" and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

Pierre Monteux will be the guest conductor Saturday at 8 p.m. The program will include Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major" with Leon Fleisher as soloist, the prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" by Wagner and Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36." There will be an open rehearsal Saturday at 10 a.m. for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

The concert Sunday at 2:30 p.m. will be conducted by Charles Munch. Munch will present the Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's "Symphony (1962)." Also on the program will be Rameau's suite from the opera, "Dardanus" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

Chamber Music

The chamber music concert Wednesday night will be the Beaux Arts Trio. Beethoven's "Trio, Op. 79, No. 1," Diamond's "Trio" and Brahms' "Trio, Op. 87" will be played.

Programs open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will include a concert by the Conductors Orchestra tomorrow at 8 p.m., a program of chamber music by students of the music center Thursday at 4 p.m., a composers' forum program Thursday at 8 p.m., a seminar on new British music Friday at 3:15 p.m. and a Berkshire Music Center concert Sunday at [illegible] a.m.

100

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, August 6, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Sunday, August 5, 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,450
AUG 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
AUG 5 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
AUG 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
AUG 5 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
AUG 9 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 7, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
AUG 2 1962

Five Conductors, Four Soloists, Will Perform During Tanglewood Weeks

It is not often that three internationally known conductors appear with the same orchestra within three days. Such is to be the case during the sixth week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival concert on Sunday, Aug. 12. For the two previous concerts of the sixth week, Dr. Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, to conduct the concert on Friday, Aug. 10, and Pierre Monteux will conduct Saturday's Aug. 11 program.

The only engagements Mr. Monteux and Mr. Ormandy have accepted this summer are those at the Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For the past two summers Mr. Ormandy has been a summer resident of the Berkshires and conducted at Tanglewood for the first time in 1961. Mr. Monteux spends his summers in Hancock, Me., and has made many appearances as a guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival during the past thirteen years. Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy have made exception to their decisions of no summer concerts in order to accept the invitation of Charles Munch.

For his program on Friday evening, Aug. 10 at 8 p.m. Mr. Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in performances of Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Pierre Monteux will be heard with the Boston Symphony on Saturday, Aug. 11, 8 p.m., in the Overture to Die Meistersinger by Wagner and Elgar's Enigma Variations. Leon Fleisher will be Mr. Monteux' guest at this concert, playing Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2.

On Sunday, Aug. 12, at 2:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in performances of the Dardanus Suite by Rameau, the Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962) and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

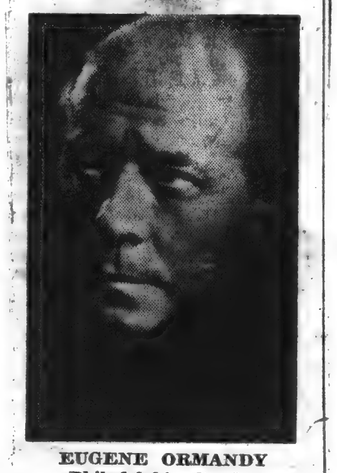
During the seventh week of the Berkshire Festival portions of two concerts will be devoted to the works of two American composers. Friday, Aug. 17, Leon Kirchner, a former member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will conduct his own composition, Sinfonia. Lukas Foss, currently a member of the composition faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony in his Time Cycle with Adele Addison as soloist. Miss Addison is an alumna of the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Foss's composition will be heard as a part of the concert on Sunday, Aug. 19.

Eugene Ormandy's second Berkshire Festival concert will be devoted to Russian music with Eugene Istomin featured in a performance with Mr. Ormandy and the Boston Symphony of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. The balance of the program will consist of the Classical Symphony and the Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

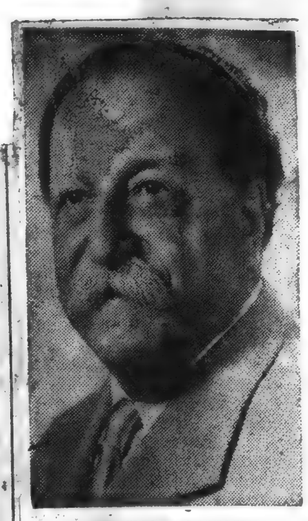
Following Mr. Kirchner's Sinfonia on Friday, Aug. 17, Joseph de Pasquale will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony in Berlioz's Harold in Italy. Dr. Munch will conclude this concert with the Reformation Symphony by Mendelssohn.

Sunday's Aug. 19 Berkshire Festival program will open with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony in Schubert's Symphony No. 5. Dr. Munch has invited Gary Graffman to be his guest in the closing work at this concert. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Brahms.

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director



EUGENE ORMANDY
Philadelphia Leader



PIERRE MONTEUX
To Conduct Saturday

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Ormandy Batons for Munch, Draws 5,889 Despite Rain

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

TANGLEWOOD — The blanket crowd was missing from the lawns around the Music Shed last night when a cold, wet rain chased everyone indoors for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

With the temperature in the low 50s, a surprisingly large crowd showed up for the performance—5,5889, according to the box office. Last year on the same night only 4,665 turned out in chilly weather for the concert conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSA, described by some music critics as one of Burgin's finest performances as a conductor. The next night when Leonard Bernstein returned to Tanglewood he drew a crowd of 13,600. An upsurge in attendance is predicted again tonight with good weather, when Pierre Monteux returns to handle the conducting duties.

Some Prepared

Music lovers and others at last night's concert for the most part came prepared for the weather. Blankets were used for lap robes. Raincoats and woolen garments formed the predominant clothing for the evening and the only members of the audience who seemed to be suffering from the elements were a few tourists and campers clad in shorts, their knees knocking together as they tried to listen.

Missing as concertmaster last night was Mr. Burgin, whose first desk was taken over by Alfred Krips. Mr. Burgin will conduct the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tuesday night's concert in place of Dr. Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days to conserve his energy for the remaining two weekends of the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Burgin, BSO officials explained, did not rehearse with the orchestra for last night's concert because he was preparing the student program for Tuesday.

Monteux for Munch

Because Dr. Munch will not conduct the Sunday concert, Mr. Monteux has offered to take over for him and has invited Irving Fine to conduct his new symphony as part of the afternoon program. Mr. Monteux will open the concert with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3 in place of Rameau's suite from the opera, "Dardanus," and will close the program, as scheduled, with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony.

Inserts in the Sunday programs explain that Dr. Munch "has agreed, on the advice of his physician, to conserve his energies by taking a short rest from conducting. He expects, however, to conduct the concerts as announced for the remainder of the season."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728
AUG 5 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,972
AUG 12 1962

Tanglewood Concerts Set This Week

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert today at 2:30 p. m. at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as the Berkshire Festival season enters its seventh week.

The orchestra will play Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3," "Fine Symphony" (1962) and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 6."

This week will also feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Charles Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony at Saturday's concert at 8 p. m. Saturday's program and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood last Friday are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program on Friday Charles Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own "Sinfonia." Mr. Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and is presently at Harvard University as professor of music.

Dr. Munch will conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5" in D minor ("Reformation"). The concert will conclude with "Harold in Italy," symphony with viola solo by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Mr. Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tschaikowsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1," in B flat minor, at the concert Saturday. Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the classical "Symphony, Op. 25," and the "Symphony No. 6," in E flat minor, "Op. 111" by Prokofiev.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a. m. on Saturday.

Monteux and the Boston Symphony will open the concert next Sunday at 2:30 p. m. with Schubert's "Symphony No. 5," in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the symphony in his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra.

NEWS BUREAU
N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

AUG 11 1962

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

AUG 9 1962

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

AUG 11 1962

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

AUG 5 1962

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108

AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 54,472

AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 9 1962

Munch Is Tired; Monteux Will Conduct Sunday

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been ordered by his physician to rest and consequently will not conduct the Sunday afternoon Berkshire Music Festival program at Tanglewood.

Pierre Monteaux, who is to conduct the Saturday evening program, will take over on Sunday also. The revised program for the Sunday concert has not been announced.

Tanglewood officials stressed that Munch "is simply tired" from the strenuous festival schedule and indicated he was expected to be all right again in a few days.

He is to retire as Boston Symphony music director with the final Tanglewood concert Aug. 26 and is scheduled to conduct three other concerts before the concluding one of the season.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, August 5, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 5, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

VALATIE ROUGH NOTES
Friday, August 10, 1962

VALATIE, N.Y.
ROUGH NOTES
W. 1,498

AUG 10 1962

HERALD-NEWS
PASSAIC-CLIFTON, N.J.

AUG 4 1962

PASSAIC, N.J.
HERALD NEWS
D. 71,175

AUG 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350

AUG 9 1962

Tanglewood Festival To Feature Ormandy

Director Of The Philadelphia Orchestra Will Make Return Appearance

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7 — Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, to return to Tanglewood this week as guest conductor for Friday's Berkshire Festival Concert. A summer resident of the Berkshires, Ormandy conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time at Tanglewood last season. Ormandy is scheduled to make a second appearance with the Boston Symphony on August 18.

TO FEATURE BEETHOVEN

For his concert on Friday night, Ormandy will open the program with Beethoven's Egmont Overture. The balance of the program will include the Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" by Beethoven, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Pierre Monteux returns to Tanglewood Saturday for the second of three appearances this season as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. Monteux has invited Leon Fleisher to be his guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 by Brahms. The Piano Concerto will be preceded by the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" by Wagner, and Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36. Prior to the evening concert there will be an open rehearsal at 10:00 A. M. for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in Sunday's Berkshire Festival program. At this concert Doctor Munch will present the Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), which had its world premiere by Doctor Munch and the Boston Symphony last March 23 in Boston. Fine is a former member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood. He is currently on the faculty of Brandeis University.

Doctor Munch has chosen to open Sunday's concert with Rameau's Suite from the Opera "Dardanus", to be followed by Fine's Symphony. The program which concludes with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique".

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will be heard in tomorrow's chamber music concert in the Theater at Tanglewood. Members of the Beaux Arts Trio, which has performed many times at these concerts, include Menahem Pressler, pianist, Daniel Guilet, violinist, and Bernard Greenhouse, cellist. Their program will include Beethoven's Trio, Op. 70, No. 1, the Trio by Diamond, and Brahms' Trio, Op. 87. Tomorrow's chamber music series is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have five events available to them this week. Tonight at 8:00 P. M. in the theater there will be concert by the conductors orchestra. A program of chamber music by the students of the Music Center will be presented Thursday at 4:00 P. M. That night at 8:00 P. M. the Tanglewood composers will present composers' forum. The Aspects of Music seminar on Friday at 3:15 will consider new British music with Iain Hamilton, composer-in-residence at Tanglewood, presiding. The regular Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert will take place at 10:00 A. M. on Sunday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

AUG 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885

AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580

AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

AUG 5 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

AUG 7 1962

TIGHT BINDING

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 16 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — by R. J.

At Tanglewood on Friday, August 10th, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was led by guest conductor Eugene Ormandy in a program of works by Beethoven and Bartok. The concert began auspiciously with the Overture from Beethoven's incidental music to Goethe's "Egmont" which Dr. Ormandy gave an appropriately spirited performance.

The main work of the first half was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E Flat ("Eroica"). The Boston players responded well to Ormandy's clear direction and gave a fine performance. It should be said, too, that Ormandy's interpretation of this music has many virtues. He is a conductor who likes dramatic music; and drama is certainly one of the elements of this score. Unfortunately the tensions and expansiveness which make this symphony the masterpiece it is were underplayed and the "heroic" emerged muted by occasional indulgences in Tschaikovskian bathos.

Following intermission, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra was played under difficult circumstances. An unusually rude audience kept up a constant and pervasive murmur throughout the better portion of the work. In addition to this wholly inexcusable noise, the heavily moisture-laden air created an atmospheric curtain which made soft passages nearly inaudible in an area as close as the box seats. The dampness also caused special hazard for the brass instruments which were definitely not up to their usual standards in this work. As best this reviewer could judge, however, Ormandy gave the Concerto for Orchestra a very fine performance.

Saturday — by C. N. D.

A clear cool night made for ideal listening Saturday at Tanglewood and with Pierre Monteux conducting for the second time this season, a good evening of music was assured. The first half of the program contained that perfect opening number, the Prelude from the Meistersinger, and the Enigma Variations of Elgar. It is often said these days that England was a great musical country in the 16th and 17th centuries and then subsided as a musical nation until the 20th century. This Elgar work of the late nineteenth century can stand very favorable comparison with anything that has come from England in this century and Monteux gave it loving treatment. Each variation received its special mood and color and the strings of the Boston Orchestra never sounded lovelier.

After the intermission Leon Fleisher played the great B Flat Concerto of Brahms and brought down the house. In fact the audience interrupted the work at the end of every movement with applause. Fleisher's playing generates excitement and if this excitement was a little too frantic in the first movement it calmed down as the work progressed and the ascending trills at the end of the third movement were an instance of inspired piano playing. Needless to say, Monteux gave the soloist superb assistance.

Sunday — by R. A. E.

A summer of unusual drought led to a week of rain, a condition much welcomed by Nature and the local farmers, but which discouraged the usual Sunday music lovers and caused a shift in the Sunday schedule when Mr. Munch because of fatigue had to turn over the director's spot to Pierre Monteux and Irving Fine whose new symphony was dedicated to the Boston Symphony and played for the first time by the orchestra today. Popular octogenarian Monteux changed the announced program and opened the afternoon's concert with a spirited rendition of Beethoven's Overture to Leonora (No. 3). Mr. Fine's new symphony was warmly received by many of the audience, and the composer tried hard to make meaningful the sudden outbursts which climaxed the various configurations, although a second hearing (or more) is needed for a more thorough appreciation of the score. Mr. Monteux's unemotional, but sensitive and thrilling direction of the Pathétique gave luxurious joy to Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, and won him a prolonged ovation.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 13, 1962

Ormandy, Monteux Lead 3 Tanglewood Concerts

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

The first pre-concert rainfall during the six weeks of major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood had slight effect on the Friday night concert with an attendance of 6,000 music lovers in the music shed.

The guest conductor was Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mr. Ormandy selected an heroic program to accentuate his fine musicianship and the virtuoso quality of the group over which he presided: the Beethoven "Egmont" overture and "Eroica" Symphony and the exciting Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

Saturday night's concert was conducted by the beloved French octogenerian, Pierre Monteux, who programmed the "Meistersinger" overture by Wagner, the "Enigma" Variations, by Elgar and the Brahms Piano Concerto, No. 2 with the young American pianistic genius, Leon Fleisher, presenting a brilliant performance of the work."

Acting on the advice of his physician, Charles Munch, scheduled to conduct yesterday afternoon's concert, agreed to rest over the weekend. His place on the podium was taken over by Pierre Monteux with only one change on the program selected by Dr. Munch; In place of "Dardanus Suite" by Rameau, Mr. Monteux substituted the "Leonore" Overture by Beethoven.

In a fine spirit of directorial camaraderie, Mr. Monteux retained the programmed "Symphony 1962," by Irving Fine, conducted by the composer. Through our untutored ears, we received the impression that had the orchestra's librarian placed the scores upside down on the music racks, the results would not have been very different.

Certainly, no member of yesterday's audience could cavil at Mr. Monteux's sensitive mixture of gaiety and sadness as evidenced by the tremendous ovation he received at the conclusion of the work.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 11 1962

RAIN AND COLD CUT CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

But 5889 Do Show Up to Hear Boston Symphony Under Ormandy

LENOX — The cold rain that fell on Tanglewood Friday night, with the thermometer registering in the low 50s, failed to dampen the enthusiasm of 5889 music lovers who turned out for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

Everyone Inside

For the first time this season, there was a scarcity of people on the lawns outside the huge Music Shed. Everyone was inside, under cover.

Blankets brought to Tanglewood were used for lap robes, and throughout the Shed people were seen bundled in heavy coats and rain gear.

The situation was pretty much the same a year ago, when the unseasonable weather kept down the crowd for a major concert. Only 4665 showed up last year on the same night.

Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, and conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Friday night moved two sections of the orchestra from their regular places. He shifted the cellists to the front of the stage, interchanging them with the viola section.

Burgin Absent

Missing as concertmaster during concert was Richard Burgin, whose place was taken by Alfred Krips. Burgin, who will conduct the student orchestra of the Music Center at Tuesday night's concert in place of Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days, did not rehearse with the orchestra for Friday night's concert because he was busy preparing the student program on Tuesday.

Ormandy, in the first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival this season, opened the concert with Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," followed by Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, "Eroica." He closed the program with Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," receiving a standing ovation.

Pierre Monteux, conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, will return to the podium in the Music Shed tonight and Sunday, sharing part of the conducting duties Sunday with Irving Fine, who will conduct his own new symphony.

Tonight Monteux will conduct the BSO in Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," and Elgar's "Enigma Variations."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Ormandy Batons for Munch, Draws 5,889 Despite Rain

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

TANGLEWOOD — The blanket crowd was n sing from the lawns around the Music Shed last night when a cold, wet rain chased everyone indoors for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

With the temperature in the low 50s, a surprisingly large crowd showed up for the performance—5,5889, according to the box office. Last year on the same night only 4,665 turned out in chilly weather for the concert conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSA, described by some music critics as one of Burgin's finest performances as a conductor. The next night when Leonard Bernstein returned to Tanglewood he drew a crowd of 13,600. An upsurge in attendance is predicted again tonight with good weather, when Pierre Monteux returns to handle the conducting duties.

Some Prepared

Music lovers and others at last night's concert for the most part came prepared for the weather. Blankets were used for lap robes. Raincoats and woolen garments formed the predominant clothing for the evening and the only members of the audience who seemed to be suffering from the elements were a few tourists and campers clad in shorts, their knees knocking together as they tried to listen.

Missing as concertmaster last night was Mr. Burgin, whose first desk was taken over by Alfred Krips. Mr. Burgin will conduct the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tuesday night's concert in place of Dr. Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days to conserve his energy for the remaining two weekends of the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Burgin, BSO officials explained, did not rehearse with the orchestra for last night's concert because he was preparing the student program for Tuesday.

Monteux for Munch

Because Dr. Munch will not conduct the Sunday concert, Mr. Monteux has offered to take over for him and has invited Irving Fine to conduct his new symphony as part of the afternoon program. Mr. Monteux will open the concert with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3 in place of Rameau's suite from the opera, "Dardanus," and will close the program, as scheduled, with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony.

Inserts in the Sunday programs explain that Dr. Munch "has agreed, on the advice of his physician, to conserve his energies by taking a short rest from conducting. He expects, however, to conduct the concerts as announced for the remainder of the season."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 5 1962

Well-Varied Fare Offered At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The weekend just concluded at Tanglewood saw a steadily mounting attendance, as fine weather and attractive guests made a winning combination.

The audience of moderate size on Friday night enjoyed a well-varied program drawing heavily on the Boston Symphony's own resources. Not only was Samuel Mayes, first cellist, revealed to splendid advantage in the Saint-Saens Violoncello Concerto No. 1, in A minor, but the Festival Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de-Varon, assisted in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The all-French program presented by Charles Munch included Honegger's Symphony No. 5 and Ravel's Choreographic Poem, "La Valse."

Saturday evening brought William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, for his first Tanglewood appearance. He has worked with the orchestra at Boston, and was warmly received by the ensemble, and evoked high enthusias from the audience of 7,631. He conducted two "eighth" symphonies, those of Beethoven and Bruckner.

The impressive total of 11,242 streamed through the gates Sunday afternoon, drawn by Rudolf Serkin in the Beethoven Fifth Piano Concerto. Munch conducted Brahm's "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6).

At no time is the mettle of an orchestra tested more rigorously than when it works for a guest conductor. Steinberg's high success on Saturday was a tribute to the orchestra as well as himself, and he took pains to share the plaudits.

The Beethoven Eighth was interpreted as a thing of great vitality and strong contrasts. Steinberg attended to details in a fascinating manner, some of his gestures seeming casual and unimportant but producing results. The playing was cleancut and assured, if seldom fussy.

There was left, nevertheless, a feeling that this is one of the lesser Beethoven symphonies.

In contrast, the Bruckner Eighth towered and shone, with a great sense of personal feeling along with its lengthy grandeurs. The volume and intensity of the orchestra in certain climaxes was amazing. Here were brasses uttering great shouts with being "noisy," and the finest integration of the big orchestras choirs. Steinberg gave the impression that this music was very close to his heart, and he met its extreme demands of softness and loudness without bombast or visible strain.

Of especial beauty were the Scherzo, which was one in name only, having a serious core, and the Adagio which floated on a charming breath of sound.

Not at all subdued by the hour-long symphony, the audience cut into the final chord with cheers from all parts of the huge music shed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773
AUG 11 1962

BERKSHIRE

Orma

By M

GLEWOOD, Le e penetrating eople did well concert in the epresented ove ar, some reason well have been Philadelphia O rmandy first ap son as a nearby ighbor. His deb success. He co is year, his secon week from toda ty with the a e evident fro of applause on and its continu n throughout th

re-Fire Wo program had a with Beethoven
"Egmont" and th
Symphony in th
Bartok's Concerto
a in the second. T nce of the "Eroi

NewEnglandNewsclipAg
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchm
Berkshire Eagle
PITTSFIELD, M
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Ormand

By JAY C. ROSEN

THE SIXTH Berkshi al weekend will be ce since 1949 in which Munch will not have eted. Due to tempo sposition, he will r s Sunday afternoon
o Pierre Monteux, who ve been one of ists who, with Mun
o have divided the h he three programs.
Last night Eugene O
usic director of the a Orchestra and a he Berkshire reside program divided ethoven and Bart eethoven consisted of re to "Egmont"
Eroica" symphony, b urces of inspiration v t remote. Beethove ve probably been or spects, had they ex ienna in his day. His ympathies, and prote latters of importance

TIGHT BINDING

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 16 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — by R. J.

At Tanglewood on Friday, August 10th, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was led by guest conductor Eugene Ormandy in a program of works by Beethoven and Bartok. The concert began auspiciously with the Overture from Beethoven's incidental music to Goethe's "Egmont" which Dr. Ormandy gave an appropriately spirited performance.

The main work of the first half was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E Flat ("Eroica"). The Boston players responded well to Ormandy's clear direction and gave a fine performance. It should be said, too, that Ormandy's interpretation of this music has many virtues. He is a conductor who likes dramatic music; and drama is certainly one of the elements of this score. Unfortunately the tensions and expansiveness which make this symphony the masterpiece it is were underplayed and the "heroic" emerged muted by occasional indulgences in Tschaikovskian bathos.

Following intermission, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra was played under difficult circumstances. An unusually rude audience kept up a constant and pervasive murmur throughout the better portion of the work. In addition to this wholly inexcusable noise, the heavily moisture-laden air created an atmospheric curtain which made soft passages nearly inaudible in an area as close as the box seats. The dampness also caused special hazard for the brass instruments which were definitely not up to their usual standards in this work. As best this reviewer could judge, however, Ormandy gave the Concerto for Orchestra a very fine performance.

Saturday — by C. N. D.

A clear cool night made for ideal listening Saturday at Tanglewood and with Pierre Monteux conducting for the second time this season, a good evening of music was assured. The first half of the program contained that perfect opening number, the Prelude from the Meistersinger, and the Enigma Variations of Elgar. It is often said these days that England was a great musical country in the 16th and 17th centuries and then subsided as a musical nation until the 20th century. This Elgar work of the late nineteenth century can stand very favorable comparison with anything that has come from England in this century and Monteux gave it loving treatment. Each variation received its special mood and color and the strings of the Boston Orchestra never sounded lovelier.

After the intermission Leon Fleisher played the great B Flat Concerto of Brahms and brought down the house. In fact the audience interrupted the work at the end of every movement with applause. Fleisher's playing generates excitement and if this excitement was a little too frantic in the first movement it calmed down as the work progressed and the ascending trills at the end of the third movement were an instance of inspired piano playing. Needless to say, Monteux gave the soloist superb assistance.

Sunday — by R. A. E.

A summer of unusual drought led to a week of rain, a condition much welcomed by Nature and the local farmers, but which discouraged the usual Sunday music lovers and caused a shift in the Sunday schedule when Mr. Munch because of fatigue had to turn over the director's spot to Pierre Monteux and Irving Fine whose new symphony was dedicated to the Boston Symphony and played for the first time by the orchestra today. Popular octogenarian Monteux changed the announced program and opened the afternoon's concert with a spirited rendition of Beethoven's Overture to Leonora (No. 3). Mr. Fine's new symphony was warmly received by many of the audience, and the composer tried hard to make meaningful the sudden outbursts which climaxed the various configurations, although a second hearing (or more) is needed for a more thorough appreciation of the score. Mr. Monteux's unemotional, but sensitive and thrilling direction of the Pathétique gave luxurious joy to Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, and won him a prolonged ovation.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 13, 1962

Ormandy, Monteux Lead 3 Tanglewood Concerts

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

The first pre-concert rainfall during the six weeks of major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood had slight effect on the Friday night concert with an attendance of 6,000 music lovers in the music shed.

The guest conductor was Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mr. Ormandy selected an heroic program to accentuate his fine musicianship and the virtuoso quality of the group over which he presided: the Beethoven "Egmont" overture and "Eroica" Symphony and the exciting Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

Saturday night's concert was conducted by the beloved French octogenerian, Pierre Monteux, who programmed the "Meistersinger" overture by Wagner, the "Enigma" Variations, by Elgar and the Brahms Piano Concerto, No. 2 with the young American pianistic genius, Leon Fleisher, presenting a brilliant performance of the work."

Acting on the advice of his physician, Charles Munch, scheduled to conduct yesterday afternoon's concert, agreed to rest over the weekend. His place on the podium was taken over by Pierre Monteux with only one change on the program selected by Dr. Munch; In place of "Dardanus Suite" by Rameau, Mr. Monteux substituted the "Leonore" Overture by Beethoven.

In a fine spirit of directorial camaraderie, Mr. Monteux retained the programmed "Symphony 1962," by Irving Fine, conducted by the composer. Through our untutored ears, we received the impression that had the orchestra's librarian placed the scores upside down on the music racks, the results would not have been very different.

Certainly, no member of yesterday's audience could cavil at Mr. Monteux's sensitive mixture of gaiety and sadness as evidenced by the tremendous ovation he received at the conclusion of the work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 11 1962

RAIN AND COLD CUT CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

But 5889 Do Show Up to Hear Boston Symphony Under Ormandy

LENOX — The cold rain that fell on Tanglewood Friday night, with the thermometer registering in the low 50s, failed to dampen the enthusiasm of 5889 music lovers who turned out for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

Everyone Inside

For the first time this season, there was a scarcity of people on the lawns outside the huge Music Shed. Everyone was inside, under cover.

Blankets brought to Tanglewood were used for lap robes, and throughout the shed people were seen bundled in heavy coats and rain gear.

The situation was pretty much the same a year ago, when the unseasonable weather kept down the crowd for a major concert. Only 4865 showed up last year on the same night.

Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, and conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Friday night moved two sections of the orchestra from their regular places. He shifted the cellists to the front of the stage, interchanging them with the viola section.

Burgin Absent

Missing as concertmaster during concert was Richard Burgin, whose place was taken by Alfred Krips. Burgin, who will conduct the student orchestra of the Music Center at Tuesday night's concert in place of Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days, did not rehearse with the orchestra for Friday night's concert because he was busy preparing the student program on Tuesday.

Ormandy, in the first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival this season, opened the concert with Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," followed by Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, "Eroica." He closed the program with Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," receiving a standing ovation.

Pierre Monteux, conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, will return to the podium in the Music Shed tonight and Sunday, sharing part of the conducting duties Sunday with Irving Fine, who will conduct his own new symphony.

Tonight Monteux will conduct the BSO in Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," and Elgar's "Enigma Variations."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Ormandy Batons for Munch, Draws 5,889 Despite Rain

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

TANGLEWOOD — The blanket crowd was missing from the lawns around the Music Shed last night when a cold, wet rain chased everyone indoors for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

With the temperature in the low 50s, a surprisingly large crowd showed up for the performance — 5,6889, according to the box office. Last year on the same night only 4,865 turned out in chilly weather for the concert conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSA, described by some music critics as one of Burgin's finest performances as a conductor. The next night when Leonard Bernstein returned to Tanglewood he drew a crowd of 12,600. An upsurge in attendance is predicted again tonight with good weather, when Pierre Monteux returns to handle the conducting duties.

Some Prepared

Music lovers and others at last night's concert for the most part came prepared for the weather. Blankets were used for lap robes. Raincoats and woolen garments formed the predominant clothing for the evening and the only members of the audience who seemed to be suffering from the elements were a few tourists and campers clad in shorts, their knees knocking together as they tried to listen.

Missing as concertmaster last night was Mr. Burgin, whose first desk was taken over by Alfred Krips. Mr. Burgin will conduct the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tuesday night's concert in place of Dr. Charles Munch, who is resting for a few days to conserve his energy for the remaining two weekends of the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Burgin, BSO officials explained, did not rehearse with the orchestra for last night's concert because he was preparing the student program for Tuesday.

Monteux for Munch

Because Dr. Munch will not conduct the Sunday concert, Mr. Monteux has offered to take over for him and has invited Irving Fine to conduct his new symphony as part of the afternoon program. Mr. Monteux will open the concert with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3 in place of Rameau's suite from the opera, "Dardanus," and will close the program, as scheduled, with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony.

Inserts in the Sunday programs explain that Dr. Munch "has agreed, on the advice of his physician, to conserve his energies by taking a short rest from conducting. He expects, however, to conduct the concerts as announced for the remainder of the season."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 8 1962

Well-Varied Fare Offered At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The weekend just concluded at Tanglewood saw a steadily mounting attendance, as fine weather and attractive guests made a winning combination.

The audience of moderate size on Friday night enjoyed a well-varied program drawing heavily on the Boston Symphony's own resources. Not only was Samuel Mayes, first cellist, revealed to splendid advantage in the Saint-Saens Violoncello Concerto No. 1, in A minor, but the Festival Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de-Varon, assisted in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The all-French program presented by Charles Munch included Honegger's Symphony No. 5 and Ravel's Choreographic Poem, "La Valse."

Saturday evening brought William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, for his first Tanglewood appearance. He has worked with the orchestra at Boston, and was warmly received by the ensemble, and evoked high enthusias from the audience of 7,631. He conducted two "eighth" symphonies, those of Beethoven and Bruckner.

The impressive total of 11,242 streamed through the gates Sunday afternoon, drawn by Rudolf Serkin in the Beethoven Fifth Piano Concerto. Munch conducted Brahm's "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6).

At no time is the mettle of an orchestra tested more rigorously than when it works for a guest conductor. Steinberg's high success on Saturday was a tribute to the orchestra as well as himself, and he took pains to share the plaudits.

The Beethoven Eighth was interpreted as a thing of great ... tality and strong contrasts. Steinberg attended to details in a fascinating manner, some of his gestures seeming casual and unnecessary but producing results. The playing was cleancut and assured, and seldom fussy.

There was left, nevertheless, a feeling that this is one of the lesser Beethoven symphonies.

In contrast, the Bruckner Eighth towered and shone, with great sense of personal feeling along with its lengthy grandeur. The volume and intensity of the orchestra in certain climaxes was amazing. Here were brasses shattering great shouts with being "noisy," and the finest integration of the big orchestra choirs. Steinberg gave the impression that this music was very close to his heart, and he met its extreme demands of softness and loudness without bombast or visible strain.

Of especial beauty were the Scherzo, which was one ... name only, having a serious ... and the Adagio which floated ... on a charming breath of ...

Not at all subdued by the hour-long symphony, the audience ... into the final chord with cheers from all parts of the huge music shed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMER...
D- 617,256 S...
AUG 11 1962

BERKSHIRE...

Orm...

...LEWOOD...
...penetrating...
...people did...
...concert in...
...presented...
...ar, some re...
...ell have...
...Philadelphia...
...rmandy...
...on as a...
...rgebor. H...
...success...
...year, h...
...week from...
...y with t...
...e evident...
...of applau...
...and its co...
...n throu...

...re-Fire...

...program...
...with Bos...
..."Egmont"...
...ymphony...
...artok's Co...
...in the s...
...ce of t...

...New England Newsclip...
...Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIch...
...Berkshire Eagle...
...PITTSFIELD, ...
...Circ. 28,71...
...AUG 11 1962...

Orma...

By JAY C. ...

THE SIXTH B...
...al weekend will...
...e since 1949 by...
...tmeh will not...
...ted. Due to...
...sposition, he...
...s Sunday after...
...Pierre Monteux...
...ve been one...
...ists who, with...
...have divided U...
...he three program...
...Last night Euge...
...sic director of...
...a Orchestra and...
...he Berkshire re...
...program Giv...
...ethoven and...
...ethoven consist...
...re to "Egmont"...
..."Eroica" symphon...
...urces of inspirati...
...t remote. "Be...
...ve probably be...
...spects, had t...
...enna in his day...
...mpathies, and...
...atters of ...

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
AUG 11 1962 Byrnelles

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Ormandy, Bostonians Excel

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11.—What with the penetrating chill and the persistent dampness, 5,889 people did well to sit through the Boston Symphony concert in the Music Shed last night. Since this total represented over 1,200 more than in attendance last year, some reason must account for the increase. It could well have been the presence of Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra as guest conductor.

Mr. Ormandy first appeared last season as a nearby Berkshire neighbor. His debut was a great success. He conducts twice this year, his second concert a week from today. His popularity with the audience became evident from the warmth of applause on his entrance and its continued enthusiasm throughout the evening.

Sure-Fire Works

The program had a sure-fire aspect with Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and the "Eroica" Symphony in the first half; Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra in the second. The performance of the "Eroica" was sure-fire, too. Mr. Ormandy dispatched the work at a fairly fast clip and with plenty of energy.

Virtuosity took command of both the orchestra and the evening. The former triumphed over the weather conditions; The success of the latter could be attributed to Mr. Ormandy's good spirits and rhythmic drive.

One Ormandy touch came before the program began: His placing the cellos at the conductor's right. Undoubtedly this arrangement is one of the secrets of the quality of sound he draws from an orchestra. The darkness and the weight of the cellos counted heavily in the full-bodied orchestral sounds heard last night. Their bite also contributed to the virtuoso effects.

As this familiar music unfolded, the question of timing arose. It came not from the fast pacing of the first and last movements of the "Eroica," but from the nature of Mr. Ormandy's musical punctuation. With ends of phrases rushed or cut off, with the listener deprived of that previous moment to digest a phrase, the work lost in communication what the performance gained in brilliance and effectiveness. It is this subtlety in timing however, that can define the true quality of a conductor.

Mr. Ormandy knows how to get an orchestra to play, but then the Boston Symphony has elements of virtuosity always awaiting exploitation. It showed its mettle last night continuously, but quite impressively in the "Egmont" overture, which received the best all-round performance of the evening in spite of an almost super-charged ending.

The Bartok fitted well into Mr. Ormandy's virtuoso manner. As well as offering other values, it has acoustical properties on which he and the orchestra capitalized successfully in this performance. Together they offered plenty to stimulate the audience.

Pierre Monteux will conduct both tonight and tomorrow afternoon since Charles Munch is resting this weekend in order to be in top form for the final two weeks of the Berkshire Festival and of his role as musical director of the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Ormandy Substitutes at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SIXTH Berkshire Festival weekend will be the first since 1949 in which Charles Munch will not have participated. Due to temporary indisposition, he will relinquish Sunday afternoon program to Pierre Monteux, who was to have been one of the two guests who, with Munch, were to have divided the honors of the three programs.

Last night Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer-time Berkshire resident, gave a program divided between Beethoven and Bartok. His program consisted of the overture to "Egmont" and the "Eroica" symphony, both with themes of inspiration which are remote. Beethoven would probably been on lists of suspects, had they existed in Vienna in his day. His political sympathies, and protests, were matters of importance to him and it takes no deep inspection to find why he found Goethe's poem on the here of the Lowlanders as a subject on which it pleased him to write graphic music.

* * *

ORMANDY DISPOSES of his strings in fan-fashion before him so that the cellos are to his right and on the outside. We had the impression that this favored tone production particularly for the "Egmont," where the formidable announcements of the stentors in the introduction were played by the famous string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the through and through quality of solid oak. Indeed Ormandy's Beethoven was varied only in power. His demands for force were more conspicuous than his admonitions for the gentler, more "dolce" episodes, although he led up to the moment where Egmont "coughs into the basket" with impressive effectiveness.

The third symphony also involved, in its original dedication at least, the hero of a later era, but one whom Beethoven rejected for his subsequent actions. Napoleon was more like Alba, the antagonist of Egmont, in his domination of the peoples of the lands he conquered, but there was no musical reference to him in the E-flat symphony. The orchestra played with deeply gratifying spaciousness for Ormandy, both in those parts where the total ensemble was utilized and in those sentences where only sections were required.

* * *

THE PROGRAM after intermission was the Bartok concerto for orchestra. This term is definable only by its exceptions. Just where a symphony ends and a concerto begins, or a sonata, or any of so many other designations, has never been clearly limited. This great work is practiacly a possession of the Boston Orchestra, Koussevitzky having commissioned it and also given it its first performance. There are five movements of remarkable individual worth. The orchestration is colorful and concise. It has no key signatures. Its distinction lies in its forward drive and the personality of the composer which consistently is revealed on every page.

The introduction of the first movement has an affinity with the Elegy (the third movement) while the puppet-show gaiety of the second movement, subtitled "giuoco delle coppie," an infectious rhythm which also serves for the fourth and final movements, where it becomes almost inextricably involved as it proceeds with atomic speed. It was a virtuoso performance and Ormandy held the reins with easy authority.

* * *

MINUTES of driving did not take us out of ear-shot of the recalls the audience of 5,889, unexpectedly large for the only Tanglewood concert this season in which the weather has been less than favorable, was insistent on demanding of him

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
D. 57,703 S. 100,849
AUG 11 1962 Byrnelles

Music: Eugene Ormandy At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — In spite of sodden grounds, a sharp chill that swept through the massive Tanglewood Music Shed, and drizzling rain, 5,889 persons were on hand last night to hear the Boston Symphony conducted by Eugene Ormandy. This was the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's sixth weekend.

Ormandy made his Tanglewood debut last summer soon after becoming a permanent summer resident in the Berkshires. He's still limping as a result of injuries received in an automobile accident of more than a year ago.

Again Ormandy brought a refreshing quality to the Tanglewood podium. The program was essentially intellectual, although the audience didn't particularly look so with a profusion of raincoats and knee blankets worn in the auditorium for warmth.

The Program

The program: Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major, "Eroica;" Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Difficulties experienced last night were over and above the norm. It is to the players' unqualified credit that intonation didn't deteriorate more, especially during the fragile fragments of the Eroica's second and slow movements, not to mention the treacherous brass trio from the scherzo. Cold, damp instruments are rascals to control. There was nothing approaching compassion or despair from Ormandy, even when wind instruments took leave of the string section's pitch.

Anyone who knows the tonal purity which the Boston Symphony almost consistently produces realized that occasional blurts were due to condition beyond control.

Ormandy conducted with his customary verve and detail. He bound the "Egmont" overture into a compact, expressive cycle of clearly defined fragments.

Blazed the Trail

Striking connections were made between robust chords in full orchestra and light woodwind solos. The overture had vigor, dramatic power, without neglecting interludes of poetry. All things considered, trumpets and horns were quite marvellous.

Ormandy did not seek or permit the epic display for which Beethoven's "Eroica" is sometimes misused. The simple, ingratiating theme of the first movement obviously blazed the trail. Strings were stringently synchronized in the nervous, descending passages.

But throughout the work, tonal shadings and volume contrasts were powerful forces in projecting the composer's philosophic revolt rather than his structural talents.

In keeping with this credo, so clearly stated in the first movement, Ormandy sketched the funeral march (second movement) as a formal processional. This was no melancholy dirge. It is heresy to suggest to the fanatic Beethoven disciples that the master got a mite long-winded in parts of this movement.

Demands Polish

Perhaps it would be less provocative to say that Ormandy demanded such polish in these collapsible passages that interest was diverted to tonal coloration and structure.

The scherzo was taken at a fast, gossipy speed. A beautiful mixture evoved from abrupt, staccato phrases and prevailing themes in upper woodwinds. Volume extended from failly to booming bursts. The trip in brass was pretty spotty, but the wet atmosphere was chief culprit.

Ormandy gave the finale a bravura start, then lavished great attention on light - textured phrases. He built it stepwise to a dazzling conclusion. And here the brasses cut through with full, clear, accurate, vibrating tone.

The usually prompt audience dribbled in after intermission to hear the bartok. The hot coffee bar apparently did a landslide business.

Although no specific narrative is associated with Bartok's orchestral concerto, last night performance gave it almost pictrial significance.

Melodies Alive

The opening wavy melodies in quiet strings and flute were intensely alive. Despite sharp changes in style, continuity was unbroken. No matter whether one listened with favor or effort to Bartok's mysticism and haphazard alterations of subjects matter, there was always tonal beauty to soothe or startle.

Tonight, Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony in Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture and Elgar's "Enigma" variations. Leon Fleisher will be soloist in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto.

Charles Munch has agreed, on the advice of his physician, to conserve his energys by taking a short rest from conducting. He will be replaced by Monteux for Sunday afternoon's concert. The program will be Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Opus 72 and Tchaikovsky's Sixth or "Pathetique" Symphony. These will be conducted by Monteux. Composer Irving Fine will conduct the orchestra in his symphony (1962).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 13 1962

At Tanglewood

Weather Brings Problems To Audience, Orchestra

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The weather which dampened the spirits of Tanglewood concert-goers for the first time this season brought some frustrating difficulties to the orchestra as well in the realm of intonation.

Friday evening's concert suffered a little when the brasses, cooling after some fanfare or other, would slowly come up to pitch on another passage. This was quite humorously evident, however, when the colder weather Saturday brought the Brahms Concerto to much more frequent trouble where the brass was more frequently employed, but still too seldom to keep the instruments warm.

Patchy Effect

Though Mr. Ormandy's handling of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is generally precise and energetic, it often is not daring enough to create long lines of swiftly flowing music, and the spasmodic boosting to occasional sections produced an even greater effect of patchiness.

So with the Egmont Overture, which he conducted, as he did the entire program without score or baton, the fortissimos emerged both overworked and harsh. While the old warhorse Spmphony No. 3, the "Eroica," by Beethoven was careful and secure, it was not much sown with fresh ideas or inflections to round out the glint of the fine romantic picture of heroism or heroes. The funeral march was, without these special notions, still quite moving, though again climaxes appeared to be overpowering and awkward in contrast to previous restraint. The eager audience, however, not only gave the performance a long applause, but expressed approval at each movement as well.

Bartok Work Played

The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, was first performed in Boston in 1944. The excellent work, that is comfortably accessible to most concert-goers, contains in its fourth movement "intermezzo interotto" a not so subtle review of a work by Shostakovich.

By placing a rather empty theme from Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony in the interruption of the intermezzo and contorting it with somewhat unpleasant sounds, Bartok leaves little unturned to provide the listener with his opinion of the Russian's musical ability. Though the performace was less than contiguous, the finale was all verve, speed and excitement.

Saturday Concert

With the Prelude to Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg, which is among the works by Wagner that offends very few, Pierre Monteux opened Saturday's concert. The rest of the program included Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme and Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with Leon Fleisher, soloist.

Despite Mr. Fleisher's youth (34) and Mr. Monteux's age (87), some very unified results of vitality and experience were created. Mr. Fleisher also produced full-toned sounds from his instrument that proved a rather new spaciousness to the work. While his pianissimos are as gentle as allowable, the energy in their insistence more than warrants the dynamic forte passages he employed with such penetration throughout the work. The orchestra, though not impeccable, was splendid nevertheless; especially remembered was the fine introduction and close of the main theme of the andante by the cellist, Mr. Mayes.

On Sunday

Sunday's program was slightly changed so that Mr. M unch could conserve his energies for the final concerts with the Symphony as its musical director. Mr. Munch's very close friend, Pierre Monteux, who is now conductor of the London Symphony, offered his services for this concert as well. He shared the podium with Irving Fine, who conducted his own Symphony 1962.

Mr. Fine's conducting, which is a little rusty through long disuse, did little to put the work in its best light; the results amid the complex rhythms were noisy and rough. Though this does not call forth glowing words of praise, there is a very nagging desire to hear the work again. The program closed with the overwhelming lamentation and abysmal sorrow of Tchaikovsky's Pathetique.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 13 1962

Music Review

Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A CHANGE in the schedule of the sixth Berkshire Festival weekend, due to the slight indisposition of the Boston Symphony orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, threw the task of conducting the final two programs at Tanglewood on the competent shoulders of the venerable Pierre Monteux.

Monteux had been invited to lead Saturday night's concert. He replaced Munch for yesterday afternoon, retaining the anchor work of Munch's program, the Tchaikovsky sixth symphony, substituting the Beethoven Leonore overture No. 3 for his opener, and giving composer Irving Fine the baton for his own symphony, finished only this year and dedicated to the Boston orchestra and Munch, who commissioned it as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning series under a grant from the Ford Foundation.

* * *

ONE OF THE advantages of inviting other distinguished conductors to share a podium with an orchestra's permanant director, in addition to deriving pleasure and profit from the guest's talents, is the extension of the orchestral repertory. Every conductor has both his favorites and his personal interests. Each has his individual experience and background. Monteux Saturday brought a long-established work but a novelty to Tanglewood, the Elgar "Enigma" variations.

Sixty years ago Elgar, evidently doing a little musical doodling, amused himself by sketching impressions of his personal friends in short paragraphs. He devised a lovely, simple theme and followed it with 14 short fantasies to which he applied only headings of initials. Hence the "enigma." They are ingenious musically, not really challenging but affectionate and endearing.

What a way to show a friend your regard; write him a musical sonnet, putting to shame those of us who for a coin buy a pre-cut sentiment. He writes an appealing short solo for the principal viola in "Ysobel," which Joseph de Pasquale dispatched conspicuously. "Nimrod" is a mellifluous chapter of touching character, written with a sense of an orchestra in which the English in other instances, too, showed a special penchant, employing and doubling a large orchestra with compounded effect.

Pierre Monteux

* * *

THE SOLOIST in the Brahms B-flat piano concerto Saturday night was Leon Fleisher, who toyed with the technical problems in a masterful conquest, and devoted his prodigious gitfs to poetic expressiveness. He exhibited his intentions in the initial bars, playing the first ascending arpeggios with gentle composure and then hooking into the first cadenza with barbaric attack, subsiding quickly to a beautiful sustained quality of tone.

The United States today is blessed with a marvelously abundant crop of pianists of a degree of competence, we would hazard to say, which has not existed at anyother time anywhere, having even in mind the Liszt and Leschetizky schools, and among whom we would not dare to attempt to make comparisons. The last one in a listener's ears leaves an incomparable souvenir. Fleisher's perdeviatingly gratifying. The cello formance on that level was unsolo in the andante was played unforgettably by Samuel Mayes.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Monteux's Tchaikovsky was another deeply satisfying performance. He does not simper nor gush on the many opportunities possible throughout the familiar score, and proceeds without excessive swooning delays or ritards. Monteux lets the Boston orchestra play and the result at this point requires no gilding. It's a rewarding event of the kind music at its most lifty affords. The whole gamut of human emotions which the composer envisaged, from lamentations to the heroic bravado of the scherzo, passes in review on the wide musical screen. It was no surprise that the audience of more than 10,000 exploded in a frenzy of happiness.

Irving Fine is no newcomer to Tanglewood. Indeed, the Berkshire Music Center considers him one of its prime exhibits. He has been in turn a student, a faculty member, and a composer on whose works they have drawn for performance. Now, due to unforseen circumstances, he reappears as conductor of his own music on the big stage of the main Shed.

His symphony is in three movements in unconventional sequence. Its most apparent attribute is its insistence on metrical irregularity. This persists in all three movements and it dominates the composition so that no one is certain what is the measure of progress, including not only the audience but the conductor and the performers. We would surmise that this factor would affect the future of such a work.

* * *

THE SECOND and third movements are the more successful. The second is a bright, spirited idea which generates excitement. Furthermore here and in the final movement his orchestration is more felicitous. The opening movement we found turgid in its employment of his very large orchestra, including piano and a large battery of percussion, and viscid in its placement in the less favorable registers of the strings.

He emerged from this atmosphere as he came to the next two movements where he used the brass sections with expertness and was gracious to include them in his acknowledgement of the response the audience gave him at the conclusion.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 13 1962

At Tanglewood

Monteux Conducts Berkshire Concert

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Looking as genial and cherubic as ever, Pierre Monteux made the first of two weekend appearances Saturday night at Tanglewood.

For all his 87 years, he has never seemed in more vital form than he was Saturday evening. In fact, as the evening progressed, his vitality seemed to be self-renewing and he moved back and forth from the wings with increasing alacrity in answer to the thunderous applause from an enthusiatic crowd.

* * *

LEON FLEISHER was the soloist on this occasion and it would be patently unfair not to accord him a lion's share of the honors. Seldom does Tanglewood hear pianism of the solid musicianship that he offered.

In Brahms' massive Piano Concerto No. 2 he fashioned a performance of rock-like strength and imperturbable control. His fortisimos thundered forth in the climactic moments and his finger dexterity throughout provided a texture of the utmost clarity.

If he does not yet convey the electric quality that Horowitz did in the final movement, he is a young man whose present technical equipment is equal to the task. When he develops the temperament to match these gifts, he will indeed be a great pianist.

* * *

MONTEUX opened his program with a stirring reading of the "Meistersinger" Overture that literally brought some of the audience to its feet. The rich sonorities of the Boston Orchestra are ideal in this music and the conductor kept them under tight rein.

I suppose Edward Elgar's "Enigma" Variations are pretty old stuff by avant-garde standards but I always enjoy this sturdy English music, even though I have difficulty trying to associate the variations with the people Elgar was portraying. Within its strictly diatonic frame, it still has plenty of variety.

With an orchestra the size of the Boston Symphony, Monteux wisely put the emphasis on sweeping lines and grandiose statement. It all came out very effectively.

A word of recognition should be accorded Samuel Mayes for his beautifully articulated cello solos in the Brahms Concerto. Due to unusually cool weather, only 7,882 customers turned out for one of Tanglewood's finest concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 19 1962

Ormandy And Monteux Conduct At Tanglewood For Evening Concerts

The sixth weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood saw an attendance of 23,395 in spite of the inclement weather. Saturday drew the largest number of music devotees, 7,882, with Piere Monteux conducting the magnificent program, which included Wagner, Elgar and Brahms.

Eugene Ormandy appeared Friday evening, for the first of two concerts this season. A standing ovation was given him by the orchestra both at the beginning and end of a superb program, with Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Eroica Symphony, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The venerable Monteux, looking newly slim and full of energy, strode on stage Saturday evening to large applause from audience and orchestra. There is never any hestitation on his part, as he commences a piece of music without score, commanding an alert attention and response from the respectful symphony members.

The chief motives in Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" retained their rich polyphonic fabric as Monteux directed with sparse but sure notions each representation. The English composer Sir Edward Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme" was as carefully delineated. Known as "Enigma," for many years the explanation was unknown, until revealed after the composer's death by his close friend, Sir Ivor Atkins. Marked with initials, asteriska, pseudonyms, each is a representation of a musical personality or friend. A violist, painist, a country squire, an organist and a favorite dog, all were treated with the composer's ideas of their idiosyncrasies. Plaintive, flip, rambling, silly laughter, lugubrious, insinuating, passionate, and the final bombast, representing the composer himself, were some of the labels one could affix to the 14 wonderfully apparent tonal portraits.

Monteux had invited Leon Fleisher to play Brahms' second Piano Concerto in B flat Major, actually a symphony intregrating both piano and orchestra, without end. One can understand why this masterful concerto might not have found favor in Leipzig, where the majority of concert goers still preferred Mendelssohn's. And one can also appreciate the composer's necessarily astounding technique on the piano, (easily encompassed by Mr. Fleisher) when he appeared as soloist introducing the concerto in Budapest, on Nov. 9, 1881. The beautifully expressive cello solo in the third movement dominated both piano and orchestra, (played by Samuel Mayes), but here one was allowed to hear the relaxed, clear tone of the pianist in the second theme for short moments. There is little rest when playing or listening to Brahms, so intermingled are his themes and development.

On the advice of his physician, Dr. Munch has agreed to conserve his energies for a short time, giving over Sunday's concert to Mr. Monteux, who kindly agreed to conduct in his stead. Again one was impressed with the renewed vigor of the latter, his characteristic and impeccable musicianship, each incisive direction firmly matched by the orchestra's openly inspired reaction, during the beginning Beethoven "Leonore" third Overture and the closing Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" symphony.

Dynamic and brilliant was the overture, the off-stage trumpeter giving his last sustained tones to the atmosphere, from whence it was plucked without notice by the strings. The clarinet solo in the first movement of the Tschaikowsky seemed unparalled for deviation of nuance, as indeed the whole performance was. Hackneyed though this symphony may be, its suave and searching performance by Monteux and the Boston Symphony would never provoke that adjective. The audience, a good many of whom sat out doors, shouted their approval during prolonged applause.

Before intermission, Irving Fine directed his own symphony, dedicated to the Boston Symphony and its conductor, Charles Munch, commissioned as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant.

From the composer's description one was able to follow his musical and dramatic intentions. It is cleverly written composition, decidedly percussive, with little or no lyricism evident though intended. Wide use of the woodwinds, a large brass choir, harp, celesta, unrolls packets of rhythmic sounds, bandied about from one instrumental group to the other, with astounding effects. Strings are scarcely recognizable as such, being exploited to the full range of their individual powers. The symphony was not meant to inspire the listener, and achieved its purpose. — M.deB.B.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

Pierre Monteux in Third Tanglewood Appearance

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Pierre Monteux's third appearance at the Berkshire Music Festival Sunday was as a substitute for the fatigued Charles Munch.

"Angry Work"

There were a few changes in the program, but its novelty was kept through a brilliant performance of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), an angry work if ever I have heard one, replete with thunderous drumbeats.

Just what it was all about I can't say, but I could imagine a good old fashioned brawl.

I find nothing specific to relate about the symphony, except that it had an impact on the audience and was written with

...with which it is familiar, ...sponse to the Tchaikov... ...s deafening. It seems to ... orchestra rose a dozen ...n response to it.

Tchaikovsky differed ... others we have heard at ...anglewood. An orchestra can ...y just so loud no matter how ...ully involved a conductor ...n its direction.

...ux conducts with un... and disciplined ease, yet ... fails to make his ideas ... to his players. The re... one can lean back and ... the music rather than a ... of acrobatics. We have ...oken at various times of the ...lection of the Tanglewood ...udience for this octogenarian.

Wednesday night's concert of chamber music in the theater will be played by the Nova Arte Trio with pianist Gary Graffman and flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer assisting.

The program will include Prokofiev's flute Sonata, Op. 94; Mozart's Divertimento, K 563, and the Brahms Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

consummate skill by a composer who not only composes but also can conduct with skill.

"Unusual Ease"

The concert opened with a magnificent and passionate performance of the "Lenore Overture No. 3" by Beethoven. Majestic, affirmative and entirely plausible was the reading Monteux lavished upon it.

Monteux conducted with his usual ease and consummate skill and won for himself and the orchestra even more applause than at former appearances.

I think he enjoyed it. It seemed to buoy him up, for he

See PIERRE MONTEUX
Page Seven

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
AUG 12 1962

Music:

Boston Symphony At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD — Placid, efficient Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Tanglewood in a program that made heavy demands on his musicianship and alertness.

An audience of 7,882 gave the 87-year-old conductor a rousing welcome that was rightfully shared by a superlatively performing orchestra.

Soloist was Leon Fleisher in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major, Opus 83. Orchestral works: Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture and Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" variations, Opus 36.

Careful Grooming

Nothing more needful of careful grooming has been played so far in this festival than Elgar's "Enigma." Monteux' drawing board treatment was indeed an enigma. Since its "enigmatic" context is entirely historical (by now, idle and dull speculation), the work has to stand on its own merit.

Unfortunately, there are too many frivolous, flighty and naive moments to offset the rhapsodic bombast that has a positive if not devastating effect on an audience.

Elgar labelled the fourteen variations with nicknames of his particular friends. Initials and such names as "Nimrod," "Ysobel" and "Dorabella" don't interest the avereage listener a whit.

Made Interesting

Monteux made the lengthy work as interesting as posible without the need for Elgar's highly personal first-aid. For one thing, he kept the theme constantly in the listener's consciousness. Systematic changes of speed did not sound overly contrived. Each variation was a separate reality, and where there was possibility for confusion, Monteux made uncommonly long pauses between.

The total result accomplished Elgar's ulterior purpose — a musical "party" of assembled personalities without the need for formal introductions.

Wagner's "Meistersinger" was a rousing concert-opener, and gave both strings and brass an equal score for technique and tonal resplendency. For some reason or other, Monteux permitted a preponderance of brass, sometimes at the expense of the string section which transmitted the main melody.

Tempo was conventional, placing a heavy hand on pompous effect. Few works in music provide a more tightly drawn drama.

Musicianly Account

Fleisher gave a musicianly account of the Brahms piano concerto, and one sensed that it was heavily influenced from the podium. The work is for piano and orchestra rather than piano with orchestral accompaniment.

Soloist, conductor and orchestra combined forces for a unified compositional result. Fleisher approached both the exposed and submerged solo segments with a sound technique for fiery passages and sensitivity.

He evidenced an excellent sense of values in deciding between his participating function and spotlight splashes which Brahms also provided for the soloist's vanity.

In spite of chill and dampness in the air, Monteux conducted an exhausting public rehearsal yesterday morning with an attendance of 2,574. Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and Tchaikovsky's sixth symphony were given performances of full concert verve, with few interruptions.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
AUG 14 1962

Tanglewood Audience Braves Rain

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — Audiences of 23,395 at the sixth week-end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood allowed neither heavy rain nor cold air to dampen the enthusiasm of their listening nor the warmth of their response to the music conducted by Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteaux. Sunday afternoon's concert with Monteux conducting as a replacement for Dr. Charles Munch, taking a week away from conducting on advice of his physician, was performed in as sunny and auspicious a setting as any this season. Leon Fleisher, a piano prodigy at seven and winner of first prize at the international competition for piano in Brussels, gave Saturday night's audience of 7,882 something to remember. The Sunday afternoon audience of 7,050 watched composer Irving Fine conduct his own "Symphony (1962)" which must have left many wondering just what he was trying to communicate. His music had odd and interesting effects for you, if you liked them, but we would have to listen many times before attempting to assay it despite the rich sound and color of the capriccio, second movement, and the terrific things heard at the end of the ode.

Monteux, fresh as a daisy at the end of the concert despite his 87 years, conducted the orchestra through Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3" and concluded Sunday's concert with a slow, deliberate reading of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6, in B minor" that was performed beautifully, with precision and opulence of tone. The "Pathetique," after many performances over the years was still a favorite. The applause at the end of the concert indicated the warmth of the audience's appreciation of conductor and orchestra.

Cold Weather

Saturday night's audience found it cool and chilly even if the Shed warmed itself applauding Leon Fleisher for a masterful performance of the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major." The music flowed with ease through the young pianist's fingers as he played the delicate and dreamy portions of the Brahms. There was vigor, too, and fire and the audience applauded for many minutes. Monteux had opened the concert with Wagner's "Prelude to Die Meistersinger," the only bit of Wagner here this season. Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme," an enigma with 14 variations, was the major portion of the first part of Saturday's concert. It too requires a number of hearings for appraisal and we wonder if we have the patience to sit through them to find out. The audience, however, was generous in its applause.

It was Friday night's audience of 5,889, huddled in coats wrapped up in warm blankets and all in under the shed because of two days of pouring rain and raw chill air, with spirits undaunted and undimmed that gave Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor a warm reception and a terrific ovation. Despite the adverse weather, one was impressed by the many young men and young women in the audience, who applauded the Beethoven and the Bartok. The orchestra gave Ormandy excellent response and one knew that such flaws as there were were due to the adverse weather for brasses and strings and not to any other reason. Ormandy made his first Tanglewood appearance last season and was invited back for two appearances this season. He does things with the Boston Symphony and they respond fully for him. The Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra," received a fine reading with moving effects, an ominous note at times and the delightful, gay humor it demands as well as the charm and delicacy of its full loveliness.

Ormandy will return to conduct a program of Prokafiev and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night when Eugene Istomin will be soloist in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Dr. Charles Munch will return Friday night to conduct music of Kirchner, Berlioz, and Mendelssohn. Sunday afternoon Graffman will play the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1," Lukas Foss will conduct his own "Time Cycle," and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5."

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 18 1962

Leon Fleisher Is Hailed At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Variable weather and program changes held down the attendance at Tanglewood this weekend. The best total was achieved Saturday, in spite of a cold evening, when 7,882 came for Pierre Monteux's conducting and the work of Leon Fleisher in the Brahms Second Piano Concerto.

Monteux, substituting for the overtired Charles Munch, resting this weekend by doctor's orders, drew 7,050 on Sunday in a program which included the Beethoven "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and the Tchaikovsky Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique"). It is doubtful if many were attracted by the Symphony of Irving Fine, dedicated to the Boston Symphony and premiered in Boston last March, even though yesterday the composer was present to conduct the score.

Friday Jinx

The Friday concert labored against the handicaps of rough weather and the usual Friday jinx, but Eugene Ormandy's guest appearance brought out 5,889, a tribute to the conductor under the circumstances. The program scheduled the Beethoven "Egmont" Overture, the Beethoven Third Symphony ("Eroica") and the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra.

Fleisher is no stranger to Tanglewood, and his playing on Saturday was worthy of the extended ovations it received. He shared the applause with Samuel Mayes, whose cello solo in the opening of the "Andante" movement was of great beauty. Fleisher also delighted the audience by managing to bring Monteux on-stage for several recalls, and one sensed a warmth between the men dating from 1944, when Monteux was conductor and Fleisher at 16 was making his first appearance with the New York Philharmonic.

The pianist maintained a neat balance between dignity and poetry, sensing at all times his proper relationship to the sizable orchestral score, and letting the initiative pass from piano to ensemble and back again freely. His brilliance was amply manifested in the second movement, "Allegro appassionato," and in the final "Allegretto grazioso," where the deceptively light opening themes developed into a dazzlingly clever game of musical tag.

Familiar Prelude

Monteux made the whole evening heart-warming on a cold night, with music which was clean-cut but never sterile. The familiar Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" glowed and came forth sturdily, with unusual attention to inner details of harmony and counterpoint.

The novelty of the evening was Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. Fourteen character sketches of friends, based on one original theme, these could easily be trifling and diffuse. Monteux let each sparkle distinctively, but held the kinship of the variations well to the fore, so that one had the impact of a kaleidoscopic suite, rather than just a set of whipped-up variations.

This work served to showcase admirably the diversified talents of the big orchestra. There were swift, noisy bits, brief and pointed, and some deliciously lingering music. Of especial stature was the finale, built on lines which brought back to some extent the eloquent feeling of the "Meistersinger" music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 278, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

AUG 13 1962

Ormandy And Monteux Conduct At Tanglewood For Evening Concerts

The sixth weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood saw an attendance of 23,395 in spite of the inclement weather. Saturday drew the largest number of music devotees 7,882, with Piere Monteux conducting the magnificent program, which included Wagner, Elgar and Brahms.

Eugene Ormandy appeared Friday evening, for the first of two concerts this season. A standing ovation was given him by the orchestra both at the beginning and end of a superb program, with Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Eroica Symphony, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The venerable Monteux, looking newly slim and full of energy, strode on stage Saturday evening to large applause from audience and orchestra. There is never any hestitation on his part, as he commences a piece of music without score, commanding an alert attention and response from the respectful symphony members.

The chief motives in Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" retained their rich polyphonic fabric as Monteux directed with sparse but sure motions each representation. The English composer Sir Edward Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme" was as carefully delineated. Known as "Enigma," for many years the explanation was unknown, until revealed after the composer's death by his close friend, Sir Ivor Atkins. Marked with initials, asteriska, pseudonyms, each is a representation of a musical personality or friend. A violist, painist, a country squire, an organist and a favorite dog, all were treated with the composer's ideas of their...

Monteux had invited Leon Fleisher to play Brahms' second Piano Concerto in B flat Major, actually a symphony intregrating both piano and orchestra, without end. One can understand why this masterful concerto might not have found favor in Leipzig, where the majority of concert goers still preferred Mendelssohn's. And one can also appreciate the composer's necessarily astounding technique on the piano, (easily encompassed by Mr. Fleisher) when he appeared as soloist introducing the concerto in Budapest, on Nov. 9, 1881. The beautifully expressive cello solo in the third movement dominated both piano and orchestra, (played by Samuel Mayes), but here one was allowed to hear the relaxed, clear tone of the pianist in the second theme for short moments. There is little rest when playing or listening to Brahms, so intermingled are his themes and development.

On the advice of his physician, Dr. Munch has agreed to conserve his energies for a short time, giving over Sunday's concert to Mr. Monteux who kindly agreed to conduct in his stead. Again one was impressed with the renewed vigor of the latter, his characteristic and impeccable musicianship, each incisive direction firmly matched by the orchestra's openly inspired reaction, during the beginning Beethoven "Leonore" third Overture and Tschaikow... closing sym... ...etique was ...stage sus... ...here. ...asked ...gs. ...first ...

Page 1

walked across to the podium with perfect ease, accepting help from no one.

"Tremendous Reading"

I have heard that applause is life blood to an artist, and it seems entirely possible. It received more applause than any other work on the program and rightly so for it was the premiere work.

Unafraid of fatigue, Monteux offered as his final number the Symphony No. 6 of Tchaikovsky. He offered a truly tremendous reading of this score.

Its melodies sang with full throated joy, and its pathos gripped the heart more than once.

"Response Deafening"

I think an audience likes best to hear a concert made up of works with which it is familiar, ... response to the Tchaikov... deafening. It seems to ... orchestra rose a dozen ... response to it.

Tchaikovsky differed ... others we have heard at ...lewood. An orchestra can ... just so loud no matter how ... involved a conductor ... in its direction.

M...ux conducts with un... and disciplined ease, yet ... fails to make his ideas ... to his players. The re... one can lean back and ... the music rather than a ... of acrobatics. We have ...oken at various times of the ...tion of the Tanglewood ...dience for this octogenarian.

Wednesday night's concert of chamber music in the theater will be played by the Nova Arte Trio with pianist Gary Graffman and flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer assisting.

The program will include Prokofiev's flute Sonata, Op. 94; Mozart's Divertimento, K 563, and the Brahms Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

AUG 12 1962

Music:

Boston Symphony At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD — Placid, efficient Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Tanglewood in a program that made heavy demands on his musicianship and alertness.

An audience of 7,882 gave the 87-year-old conductor a rousing welcome that was rightfully shared by a superlatively performing orchestra.

Soloist was Leon Fleisher in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major, Opus 83. Orchestral works: Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture and Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" variations, Opus 36.

Careful Grooming

Nothing more needful of careful grooming has been played so far in this festival than Elgar's "Enigma." Monteux' drawing board treatment was indeed an enigma. Since its "enigmatic" context is entirely historical (by now, idle and dull speculation), the work has to stand on its own merit.

Unfortunately, there are too many frivolous, flighty and naive moments to offset the rhapsodic bombast that has a positive if not devastating effect on an audience.

Elgar labelled the fourteen variations with nicknames of his particular friends. Initials and such names as "Nimrod," "Ysobel" and "Dorabella" don't interest the avereage listener a whit.

Made Interesting

Monteux made the lengthy work as interesting as posible without the need for Elgar's highly personal first-aid. For one thing, he kept the theme constantly in the listener's consciousness. Systematic changes of speed did not sound overly contrived. Each variation was a separate reality, and where there was possibility for confusion, Monteux made uncommonly long pauses between.

The total result accomplished Elgar's ulterior purpose — a musical "party" of assembled personalities without the need for formal introductions.

Wagner's "Meistersinger" was a rousing concert-opener, and gave both strings and brass an equal score for technique and tonal resplendency. For some reason or other, Monteux permitted a preponderance of brass, sometimes at the expense of the string section which transmitted the main melody.

Tempo was conventional, placing a heavy hand on pompous effeet. Few works in music provide a more tightly drawn drama.

Musicianly Account

Fleisher gave a musicianly account of the Brahms piano concerto, and one sensed that it was heavily influenced from the podium. The work is for piano and orchestra rather than piano with orchestral accompaniment.

Soloist, conductor and orchestra combined forces for a unified compositional result. Fleisher approached both the exposed and submerged solo segments with a sound technique for fiery passages and sensitivity.

He evidenced an excellent sense of values in deciding between his participating function and spotlight splashes which Brahms also provided for the soloist's vanity.

In spite of chill and dampness in the air, Monteux conducted an exhausting public rehearsal yesterday morning with an attendance of 2,574. Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and Tchaikovsky's sixth symphony were given performances of full concert verve, with few interruptions.

...neviation of nuance, as indeed the whole performance was. Hackneyed though this symphony may be, its suave and searching performance by Monteux and the Boston Symphony would never provoke that adjective. The audience, a good many of whom sat outdoors, shouted their approval during prolonged applause.

Before intermission, Irving Fine directed his own symphony, dedicated to the Boston Symphony and its conductor, Charles Munch, commissioned as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant.

From the composer's description one was able to follow his musical and dramatic intentions. It is cleverly written composition, decidedly percussive, with little or no lyricism evident though intended. Wide use of the woodwinds, a large brass choir, harp, celesta, unrolls packets of rhythmic sounds, bandied about from one instrumental group to the other, with astounding effects. Strings are scarcely recognizable as such, being exploited to the full range of their individual powers. The symphony was not meant to inspire the listener, and achieved its purpose. — M.deB.B.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848

AUG 14 1962

Tanglewood Audience Braves Rain

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — Audiences of 23,395 at the sixth week-end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood allowed neither heavy rain nor cold air to dampen the enthusiasm of their listening nor the warmth of their response to the music conducted by Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteaux. Sunday afternoon's concert with Monteux conducting as a replacement for Dr. Charles Munch, taking a week away from conducting on advice of his physician, was performed in as sunny and auspicious a setting as any this season. Leon Fleisher, a piano prodigy at seven and winner of first prize at the international competition for piano in Brussels, gave Saturday night's audience of 7,882 something to remember. The Sunday afternoon audience of 7,050 watched composer Irving Fine conduct his own "Symphony (1962)" which must have left many wondering just what he was trying to communicate. His music had odd and interesting effects for you, if you liked them, but we would have to listen many times before attempting to assay it despite the rich sound and color of the capriccio, second movement, and the terrific things heard at the end of the ode.

Monteux, fresh as a daisy at the end of the concert despite his 87 years, conducted the orchestra through Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3" and concluded Sunday's concert with a slow, deliberate reading of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6, in B minor" that was performed beautifully, with precision and opulence of tone. The "Pathetique," after many performances over the years was still a favorite. The applause at the end of the concert indicated the warmth of the audience's appreciation of conductor and orchestra.

Cold Weather

Saturday night's audience found it cool and chilly even if the Shed warmed itself applauding Leon Fleisher for a masterful performance of the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major." The music flowed with ease through the young pianist's fingers as he played the delicate and dreamy portions of the Brahms. There was vigor, too, and fire and the audience applauded for many minutes. Monteux had opened the concert with Wagner's "Prelude to Die Meistersinger" the only bit of Wagner here this season. Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme," an enigma with 14 variations, was the major portion of the first part of Saturday's concert. It too requires a number of hearings for appraisal and we wonder if we have the patience to sit through them to find out. The audience, however, was generous in its applause.

It was Friday night's audience of 5,889, huddled in coats wrapped up in warm blankets and all in under the shed because of two days of pouring rain and raw chill air, with spirits undaunted and undimmed that gave Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor a warm reception and a terrific ovation. Despite the adverse weather, one was impressed by the many young men and young women in the audience, who applauded the Beethoven and the Bartok. The orchestra gave Ormandy excellent response and one knew that such flaws as there were were due to the adverse weather for brasses and strings and not to any other reason. Ormandy made his first Tanglewood appearance last season and was invited back for two appearances this season. He does things with the Boston Symphony and they respond fully for him. The Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra," received a fine reading with moving effects, an ominous note at times and the delightful, gay humor it demands as well as the charm and delicacy of its full loveliness.

Ormandy will return to conduct a program of Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night when Eugene Istomin will be soloist in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Dr. Charles Munch will return Friday night to conduct music of Kirchner, Berlioz, and Mendelssohn. Sunday afternoon Graffman will play the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1." Lukas Foss will conduct his own "Time Cycle," and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5."

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451

AUG 13 1962

Leon Fleisher Is Hailed At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Variable weather and program changes held down the attendance at Tanglewood this weekend. The best total was achieved Saturday, in spite of a cold evening, when 7,882 came for Pierre Monteux's conducting and the work of Leon Fleisher in the Brahms Second Piano Concerto.

Monteux, substituting for the overtired Charles Munch, resting this weekend by doctor's orders, drew 7,050 on Sunday in a program which included the Beethoven "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and the Tchaikovsky Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique"). It is doubtful if many were attracted by the Symphony of Irving Fine, dedicated to the Boston Symphony and premiered in Boston last March, even though yesterday the composer was present to conduct the score.

Friday Jinx

The Friday concert labored against the handicaps of rough weather and the usual Friday jinx, but Eugene Ormandy's guest appearance brought out 5,889, a tribute to the conductor under the circumstances. The program scheduled the Beethoven "Egmont" Overture, the Beethoven Third Symphony ("Eroica") and the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra.

Fleisher is no stranger to Tanglewood, and his playing on Saturday was worthy of the extended ovations it received. He shared the applause with Samuel Mayes, whose cello solo in the opening of the "Andante" movement was of great beauty. Fleisher also delighted the audience by managing to bring Monteux on-stage for several recalls, and one sensed a warmth between the men dating from 1944, when Monteux was conductor and Fleisher at 16 was making his first appearance with the New York Philharmonic.

The pianist maintained a neat balance between dignity and poetry, sensing at all times his proper relationship to the sizable orchestral score, and letting the initiative pass from piano to ensemble and back again freely. His brilliance was amply manifested in the second movement, "Allegro appassionato," and in the final "Allegretto grazioso," where the deceptively light opening themes developed into a dazzlingly clever game of musical tag.

Familiar Prelude

Monteux made the whole evening heart-warming on a cold night, with music which was clean-cut but never sterile. The familiar Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" glowed and came forth sturdily, with unusual attention to inner details of harmony and counterpoint.

The novelty of the evening was Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. Fourteen character sketches of friends, based on one original theme, these could easily be trifling and diffuse. Monteux let each sparkle distinctively, but held the kinship of the variations well to the fore, so that one had the impact of a kaleidoscopic suite, rather than just a set of whipped-up variations.

This work served to showcase admirably the diversified talents of the big orchestra. There were swift, noisy bits, brief and pointed, and some deliciously lingering music. Of especial stature was the finale, built on lines which brought back to some extent the eloquent feeling of the "Meistersinger" music.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 12 1962

MONTEUX DRAWS 7882 LISTENERS TO TANGLEWOOD

Octogenarian Establishes 'Real Collaboration' With Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — An audience of 7882 music lovers turned out to hear and see Pierre Monteux during his second appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the great shed which houses the orchestra's Berkshire Festival concerts.

Marvelous Ease

It was well worth braving the damp and cold to watch the marvelous ease with which this octogenarian made his points clear to the orchestra, and equally marvelous was the way they obeyed every direction. This was real collaboration between orchestra and conductor.

The program ranged from Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" through the "Enigma Variations" of Elgar and concluded with a truly magnificent performance of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat major with Leon Fleisher as pianist.

It was truly marvelous to watch Monteux breathe color and life into the Meistersinger overture. The work pulsated under his beat, and its many colors glowed with a brilliance not often accomplished during an operatic performance.

In many ways this perform-

(See MONTEUX DRAWS)
(Page 16A)

it to who the
Friday night concert, the first concert I have missed in 20 years.

For some reason I got tangled up with high blood pressure and tensions which resulted in a slight shock which put me in the hospital for a week and incapacitated my left hand.

Everyone says it's going to be all right, which it probably will. In the meantime, I have Linda Sanford in the Boston Symphony press office to act as my amanuensis. How lucky can a fellow be?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175
AUG 13 1962

Audience Enthused At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Audiences of 23,395 at the sixth week-end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood allowed neither heavy rain nor cold air to dampen the enthusiasm of their listening nor the warmth of their response to the music conducted by Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux. Sunday afternoon's concert with Monteux conducting as a replacement for Dr. Charles Munch, taking a week away from conducting on advice of his physician, was performed in as sunny and auspicious a setting as any this season. Leon Fleisher, a piano prodigy at seven and winner of first prize at the international competition for piano in Brussels, gave Saturday night's audience of 7,882 something to remember. The Sunday afternoon audience of 7,050 watched composer Irving Fine conduct his own "Symphony (1962)" which must have left many wondering just what he was trying to communicate. His music had odd and interesting effects for you, if you liked them, but we would have to listen many times before attempting to assay it despite the rich sound and color of the capriccio, second movement, and the terrific things heard at the end of the ode.

Monteux, fresh as a daisy at the end of the concert despite his 87 years, conducted the orchestra through Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3" and concluded Sunday's concert with a slow, deliberate reading of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6, in B minor" that was performed beautifully, with precision and opulence of tone. The "Pathetique," after many performances over the years, was still a favorite. The applause at the end of the concert indicated the warmth of the audience's appreciation of conductor and orchestra.

Cold Weather

Saturday night's audience that found it cool and chilly even if the Shed warmed itself applauding Leon Fleisher for a masterful performance of the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major." The music flowed with ease through the young pianist's fingers as he played the delicate and dreamy portions of the Brahms. There was vigor, too, and fire and the audience applauded for many minutes. Monteux had opened the concert with Wagner's "Prelude to Die Meistersinger" the only bit of Wagner here this season. Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme," an enigma with 14 variations, was the major portion of the first part of Saturday's concert. It too requires a number of hearings for appraisal and we wonder if we have the patience to sit through them to find out. The audience, however, was generous in its applause.

It was Friday night's audience of 5,889, huddled in coats, wrapped up in warm blankets and all in under the shed because of two days of pouring rain and raw chill air, with spirits undaunted and undimmed that gave Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor a warm reception and a terrific ovation. Despite the adverse weather, one was impressed by the many young men and young women in the audience, who applauded the Beethoven and the Bartok. The orchestra gave Ormandy excellent response and one knew that such flaws as there were due to the adverse weather for brasses and strings and not to any other reason. Ormandy made his first Tanglewood appearance last season and was invited back for two appearances this season. He does things with the Boston Symphony and they respond fully for him. The Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" received a fine reading with moving effects, an ominous note at times and the delightful, gay humor it demands as well as the charm and delicacy of its full loveliness.

Ormandy will return to conduct a program of Prokafiev and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night when Eugene Istomin will be soloist in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Dr. Charles Munch will return Friday night to conduct music of Kirchner, Berlioz, and Mendelssohn. Sunday afternoon Graffman will play the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1," Lukas Foss will conduct his own "Time Cycle," and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's "Symphony No. 5."

S. M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 13 1962

Music: Monteux Conducts at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Music by Tchaikovsky was never more welcomed than at the closing concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's sixth weekend yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood.

The podium was shared by two conductors. Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Leonora Ocerture, No. 3, Opus 72, and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Opus 74, "Pathetique." The interim work was Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), conducted by the composer.

Yesterday's attendance was 7,050 bringing the weekend total to 23,395.

It was confirmed yesterday afternoon that there is no more tolerant, open-minded, downright charitable audience than at Tanglewood. One sometimes suspects that generous applause is for the merciful conclusion of certain works, or purely an expression of admiration for orchestra and conductor who also suffered them through.

Monteux Substituted

Yesterday's concert, including the Fine symphony, was to have been conducted by Charles Munch. He was advised by his physician to rest.

Monteux substituted Beethoven's "Leonora" for the "Dardanus" suite by Rameau. He conducted the Beethoven and originally intended Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" but chose not to conduct Fine's symphony.

Fine dedicated the work to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Munch, who commissioned it as part of the American Music Center's series under a grant from the Ford Foundation. The symphony was poorly received when played by the Boston Symphony in its winter series.

The pastoral setting of Tanglewood did not alter that impression nor did Fine succeed yesterday where Munch previously had failed, Munch must have approved the work to conduct it.

Music Blameworthy

Although Fine's podium talents are relegated to student caliber, neither conductor was really responsible for the symphony's abject failure. The blame rests squarely on the music.

This is another example of experimental, inspirationless contemporary effort that seeks acceptance through documentary - sounding program notes. At Saturday morning's open rehearsal, the audience didn't even have the benefit of such fodder. Many persons sought their own refuge outside the Music Shed after Fine commenced to conduct his "symphony."

Yesterday's audience couldn't have found much solace or enlightenment in such Fine "explanatory" phrases as "choreographic action," "dithyrambic fantasia," or "metamorphosed outbursts."

Reaction Apathetic

This audience wanted to hear something of value. In view of the symphony's previous flop, it was a downright imposition yesterday to offer 7,000-plus persons this utterly absurd instrumental concoction.

The apathetic reaction of yesterday's audience, while it was glistening, must have made this eminently obvious to anyone with observation.

Nothing is to be gained by trying to "describe" the symphony whose three movements are disguised under the titles "intrada" "capriccio" and "ode." Suffice to say that it was a holocaust of clatter.

Monteux conducted the orchestra in a dazzling performance of Beethoven's "Leonora." Tone of the opening passages was lustrous, though attacks were not always synchronized. There was beautiful phrasing by woodwinds and brasses were scintillating in bravura pasages. Offstage - trumpet fanfares were played brilliantly by Roger Voisin.

Friday's Program

Quite apart from administering first aid after Fine's symphony, the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" was played with glowing newness. Monteux did little to lessen the impact of sobbing laments that run through all but the third, or March, movement, but these were transmitted with maximum poise, certainly abetted by Monteux' tasteful, almost rigid, conducting.

The gorgeous second themes of the first and fourth movements virtually floated on air. Brasses were warmly toned and permitted to emphasize secondary themes that usually are kept with background material.

The march movement forged swiftly ahead. Four-note brass fanfares lashed out in the storm but Monteux didn't allow the movement to blast until the end, when he slowed slightly to make it more imposing.

The festival will be resumed Friday, Leon Kirchner will conduct his "Sinfonia." Munch will conduct Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5, "Reformation."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175
AUG 13 1962

Audience Enthused At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Audiences of 23,395 at the sixth week-end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood allowed neither heavy rain nor cold air to dampen the enthusiasm of their listening nor the warmth of their response to the music conducted by Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux. Sunday afternoon's concert with Monteux conducting as a replacement for Dr. Charles Munch, taking a week away from conducting on advice of his physician, was performed in as sunny and auspicious a setting as any this season. Leon Fleisher, a piano prodigy at seven and winner of first prize at the international competition for piano in Brussels, gave Saturday night's audience of 7,882 something to remember. The Sunday afternoon audience of 7,050 watched composer Irving Fine conduct his own "Symphony (1962)" which must have left many wondering just what he was trying to communicate. His music had odd and interesting effects for you, if you liked them, but we would have to listen many times before attempting to assay it despite the rich sound and color of the capriccio, second movement, and the terrific things heard at the end of the ode.

Monteux, fresh as a daisy at the end of the concert despite his 87 years, conducted the orchestra through Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3" and concluded Sunday's concert with a slow, deliberate reading of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6, in B minor" that was performed beautifully, with precision and opulence of tone. The "Pathetique," after many performances over the years, was still a favorite. The applause at the end of the concert indicated the warmth of the audience's appreciation of conductor and orchestra.

Cold Weather

Saturday night's audience that found it cool and chilly even if the Shed warmed itself applauding Leon Fleisher for a masterful performance of the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major." The music flowed with ease through the young pianist's fingers as he played the delicate and dreamy portions of the Brahms. There was vigor, too, and fire and the audience applauded for many minutes. Monteux had opened the concert with Wagner's 'Prelude to Die Meistersinger" the only bit of Wagner here this season. Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme," an enigma with 14 variations, was the major portion of the first part of Saturday's concert. It too requires a number of hearings for apprisal and we wonder if we have the patience to sit through them to find out. The audience, however, was generous in its applause.

It was Friday night's audience of 5,889, huddled in coats, wrapped up in warm blankets and all in under the shed because of two days of pouring rain and raw chill air, with spirits undaunted and undimmed that gave Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor a warm reception and a terrific ovation. Despite the adverse weather, one was impressed by the many young men and young women in the audience, who applauded the Beethoven and the Bartok. The orchestra gave Ormandy excellent response and one knew that such flaws as there were due to the adverse weather for brasses and strings and not to any other reason. Ormandy made his first Tanglewood appearance last season and was invited back for two appearances this season. He does things with the Boston Symphony and they respond fully for him. The Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" received a fine reading with moving effects, an ominous note at times and the delightful, gay humor it demands as well as the charm and delicacy of its full loveliness.

Ormandy will return to conduct a program of Prokafiev and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night when Eugene Istomin will be soloist in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Dr. Charles Munch will return Friday night to conduct music of Kirchner, Berlioz, and Mendelssohn. Sunday afternoon Graffman will play the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1," Lukas Foss will conduct his own "Time Cycle," and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's "Symphony No. 5."

S. M.

(Continued From Page 1A)

ance was duplicated in sheer brilliance by his leading of the "enigma variations"; I am inclined to think that Elgar made more news by labeling this work, "Enigma" than by the msuic itself. It seems that for years musicologists have been striving to solve the "Engima" and perhaps there is one; but to me this sounds like good, healthy, cleverly made music, and that's enough.

What can one say about the Brahms Concerto No. 2 that has not long since been said? Much much ink has been spilled in its defense, and there has been some pure calumny. It offers a superb pianist full scope for his artistic and creative gifts to say nothing of his pianistic gifts.

The unassuming young Fleisher sits at the piano and becomes completely absorbed in the task at hand, at least he did Saturday night. He can play like a fiend, summon tremendous power and at the next moment caress a phrase so tha it embraces one's being.

Some concerti give a soloist greater range for his talents than this particular one. Many people have called it academic, but what good is music if it is not academic? It could turn out to be mere slush.

I am not surprised that the Fleisher-Monteux-Boston Symphony combination earned its well-deserved and protracted rounds of applause.

Fleisher was fortunate in having so profound a conductor as Monteux, and Monteux was equally fortunate in having so brilliant an associate.

I want to digress a moment to thank the many people who noticed my absence from the Friday night concert, the first concert I have missed in 20 years.

For some reason I got tangled up with high blood pressure and tensions which resulted in a slight shock which put me in the hospital for a week and incapacitated my left hand.

Everyone says it's going to be all right, which it probably will. In the meantime, I have Linda Sanford in the Boston Symphony press office to act as my amanuensis. How lucky can a fellow be?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 13 1962

Music: Monteux Conducts at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Music by Tchaikovsky was never more welcomed than at the closing concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's sixth weekend yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood.

The podium was shared by two conductors. Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Leonora Ocerture, No. 3, Opus 72, and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Opus 74, "Pathetique." The interim work was Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), conducted by the composer.

Yesterday's attendance was 7,050 bringing the weekend total to 23,395.

It was confirmed yesterday afternoon that there is no more tolerant, open-minded, downright charitable audience than at Tanglewood. One sometimes suspects that generous applause is for the merciful conclusion of certain works, or purely an expression of admiration for orchestra and conductor who also suffered them through.

Monteux Substituted

Yesterday's concert, including the Fine symphony, was to have been conducted by Charles Munch. He was advised by his physician to rest.

Monteux substituted Beethoven's "Leonora" for the "Dardanus" suite by Rameau. He conducted the Beethoven and originally intended Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" but chose not to conduct Fine's symphony.

Fine dedicated the work to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Munch, who commissioned it as part of the American Music Center's series under a grant from the Ford Foundation. The symphony was poorly received when played by the Boston Symphony in its winter series.

The pastoral setting of Tanglewood did not alter that impression nor did Fine succeed yesterday where Munch previously had failed, Munch must have approved the work to conduct it.

Music Blameworthy

Although Fine's podium talents are relegated to student caliber, neither conductor was really responsible for the symphony's abject failure. The blame rests squarely on the music.

This is another example of experimental, inspirationless contemporary effort that seeks acceptance through documentary sounding program notes. At Saturday morning's open rehearsal, the audience didn't even have the benefit of such fodder. Many persons sought their own refuge outside the Music Shed after Fine commenced to conduct his "symphony."

Yesterday's audience couldn't have found much solace or enlightenment in such Fine "explanatory" phrases as "choreographic action," "dithyrambic fantasia," or "metamorphosed outbursts."

Reaction Apathetic

This audience wanted to hear something of value. In view of the symphony's previous flop, it was a downright imposition yesterday to offer 7,000-plus persons this utterly absurd instrumental concoction.

The apathetic reaction of yesterday's audience, while it was glistening, must have made this eminently obvious to anyone with observation.

Nothing is to be gained by trying to "describe" the symphony whose three movements are disguised under the titles "intrada" "capriccio" and "ode." Suffice to say that it was a holocaust of clatter.

Monteux conducted the orchestra in a dazzling performance of Beethoven's "Leonora." Tone of the opening passages was lustrous, though attacks were not always synchronized. There was beautiful phrasing by woodwinds and brasses were scintillating in bravura pasages. Offstage - trumpet fanfares were played brilliantly by Roger Voisin.

Friday's Program

Quite apart from administering first aid after Fine's symphony, the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" was played with glowing newness. Monteux did little to lessen the impact of sobbing laments that run through all but the third, or March, movement, but these were transmitted with maximum poise, certainly abetted by Monteux' tasteful, almost rigid, conducting.

The gorgeous second themes of the first and fourth movements virtually floated on air. Brasses were warmly toned and permitted to emphasize secondary themes that usually are kept with background material.

The march movement forged swiftly ahead. Four-note brass fanfares lashed out in the storm but Monteux didn't allow the movement to blast until the end, when he slowed slightly to make it more imposing.

The festival will be resumed Friday, Leon Kirchner will conduct his "Sinfonia." Munch will conduct Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5, "Reformation."

Chemical Makes Garden Plants Drought Resistant

...and Mrs. Annie L. ... Springfield ... Saturday at the ... home, ... solemn high ... Our Lady of ... Rev. ... Burial ... Cemetery, ... Rev. ... Costumes ... by Dass- ... illustrator of ... books.

...Agency, Inc. ...mond 2-4200 ...can ...ast.

...DRAWS

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2073, Boston ¢ • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 1[illegible],849

Music: Boston Symphony At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD — Placid, efficient Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Tanglewood in a program that made heavy demands on his musicianship and alertness.

An audience of 7,882 gave the 87-year-old conductor a rousing welcome that was rightfully shared by a superlatively performing orchestra.

Soloist was Leon Fleisher in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major, Opus 83. Orchestral works: Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture and Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" variations, Opus 36.

Nothing more needful of careful grooming has been played so far in this festival than Elgar's "Enigma." Monteux' drawing board treatment was indeed an enigma. Since its "enigmatic" context is entirely historical (by now, idle and dull speculation), the work has to stand on its own merit.

Unfortunately, there are too many frivolous, flighty and naive moments to offset the rhapsodic bombast that has a positive if not devastating effect on an audience.

Elgar labelled the fourteen variations with nicknames of his particular friends. Initials and such names as "Nimrod," "Ysobel" and "Dorabella" don't interest the avereage listener a whit.

Made Interesting

Monteux made the lengthy work as interesting as posible without the need for Elgar's highly personal first-aid. For one thing, he kept the theme constantly in the listener's consciousness. Systematic changes of speed did not sound overly contrived. Each variation was a separate reality, and where there was possibility for confusion, Monteux made uncommonly long pauses between.

The total result accomplished Elgar's ulterior purpose — a musical "party" of assembled personalities without the need for formal introductions.

Wagner's "Meistersinger" was a rousing concert-opener, and gave both strings and brass an equal score for technique and tonal resplendency. For some reason or other, Monteux permitted a preponderance of brass, sometimes at the expense of the string section which transmitted the main melody.

Tempo was conventional, placing a heavy hand on pompous effect. Few works in music provide a more tightly drawn drama.

Musicianly Account

Fleisher gave a musicianly account of the Brahms piano concerto, and one sensed that it was heavily influenced from the podium. The work is for piano and orchestra rather than piano with orchestral accompaniment.

Soloist, conductor and orchestra combined forces for a unified compositional result. Fleisher approached both the exposed and submerged solo segments with a sound technique for fiery passages and sensitivity.

He evidenced an excellent sense of values in deciding between his participating function and spotlight splashes which Brahms also provided for the soloist's vanity.

In spite of chill and dampness in the air, Monteux conducted an exhausting public rehearsal yesterday morning with an attendance of 2,574. Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 and Tchaikovsky's sixth symphony were given performances of full concert verve, with few interruptions.

Enjoying Himself

The old boy was apparently enjoying himself to the fullest. When it came to the emotional second theme of the symphony's first movement, Monteux jokingly led on the violins with a gesture that would have done justice to Romeo in the balcony scene.

As a festival sidelight, it is a matter of considerable interest hereabouts that Berkshire Music Center events are showing an appreciable decline in support this summer.

Admission is free to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school with a present enrollment of 270 students.

These patrons make voluntary season contributions, or may attend individual events. One drawback was the withdrawal of the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, just before school opening. His classes have been taken by Richard Burgin, Boston Symphony concert master. He has therefore not appeared at some of the festival concerts and Alfred Krips has served as concert master.

The change from Thursday to Tuesday nights for Berkshire Center Orchestra concerts has been unpopular with patrons. Even more important was the discontinuance of the center's opera department this summer. This cut about six events from the center's concert schedule, and interrupted one of its most popular features. The opera department director, Boris Goldovsky, is on leave of absence.

Unfavorable Comment

Various center programs, called "Aspects of new music," have aroused unfavorable comment from several quarters. Attendance for these ranges from 150 to 900.

But as an observer stated to us: "Many people can't take it, and they walk out."

Taking his doctor's advice that he rest, Charles Munch will not conduct this afternoon as planned. Monteux will substitue, conducting the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's third Leonore Overture and Tchaikovsky's sixth or "Pathetique" symphony. Composer Irving Fine will conduct the orchestra in his symphony (1962.)

BLANK PAGE

7TH WEEK AUG 13TH – AUG 19TH.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, August 17, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

KIRCH — Sinfonia

Conducted by the Composer

MEND — SOHN — Symphony No. 5, in D minor ("Reformation"), Op. 107

I. Andante; Allegro con fuoco
II. Allegro vivace
III. Andante
IV. Chorale: Ein'feste Burg ist unser Gott (Andante con moto); Allegro vivace; Allegro maestoso

Intermission

BERLIOZ — *"Harold in Italy": Symphony with Viola Solo, Op. 16

I. Harold in the Mountains, Scenes of Melancholy, Happiness and Joy (Adagio; Allegro)
II. March of Pilgrims singing their Evening Hymn (Allegretto)
III. Serenade of a Mountaineer of the Abruzzi to his Mistress (Allegro assai; Allegretto)
IV. Orgy of Brigands; Recollections of the Preceding Scenes (Allegro frenetico)

Soloist: JOSEPH DEPASQUALE

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, August 18, at 8:00

EUGENE ORMANDY, Conductor

PROKOFIEV — "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25

I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale

PROKOFIEV — Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111

I. Allegro moderato
II. Largo
III. Vivace

Intermisston

TCHAIKOVSKY — Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23

I. Allegro non troppo e molto maestoso; Allegro con spirito
II. Andantino semplice; Allegro vivace assai
III. Allegro con fuoco

Soloist: EUGENE ISTOMIN

Mr. ISTOMIN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, August 19, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

SCHUBERT — Symphony No. 5, in B-flat

I. Allegro
II. Andante con moto
III. Minuetto; Allegro molto
IV. Allegro vivace

FOSS — Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra

We're late (W. H. Auden)
When the bells jostle (A. E. Housman)
Sechzehnter Januar (Franz Kafka)
O Mensch, gib Acht (Friedrich Nietzsche)

Conducted by the Composer

Soloist: ADELE ADDISON

Intermission

BRAHMS — *Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor, Op. 15

I. Maestoso
II. Adagio
III. Rondo: Allegro non troppo

Soloist: GARY GRAFFMAN

Mr. GRAFFMAN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

AUG 12 1962

ADELE ADDISON, soprano, will be soloist in Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" next Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Tanglewood.

This Week's Program

Ormandy Is Again Tanglewood Guest

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. will feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Charles Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Saturday evening's concert. Saturday's program and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood on Aug. 10 are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, Charles Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own sinfonia. Dr. Munch will conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5 in D minor ("Reformation"), "Harold in Italy" and Symphony with Viola Solo by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Eugene Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B flat minor, at the Berkshire Festival concert on Saturday, Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will include the "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat minor, Op. 111 by Prokofiev.

An Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a.m. on Saturday.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the concert next Sunday afternoon with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his "Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra."

Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony. Mr. Graffman will play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

The Nova Arte Trio will be heard at the Wednesday chamber music concert in the Theatre. Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the assisting artists in a program consisting of the Flute Sonata, Op. 94 by Prokofiev, Mozart's Divertimento, K. 563, and Brahms' Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

AUG 15 1962

GUEST SOLOIST

ADELE ADDISON

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox will feature Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor on Saturday in his second and final concert for the season. He will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Russian music.

Charles Munch will conduct the Sunday concert, with a portion of this program devoted to "Time Cycle" by Lukas Foss, with the composer conducting and Adele Addison, soprano, as soloist. Doctor Munch will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and has invited Gary Graffman to be his guest for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Brahms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

AUG 12 1962

CONDUCTS OWN COMPOSITION: Lukas Foss, who will conduct his own composition, "Time Cycle," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Adele Addison, soprano soloist, at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood on Sunday, Aug. 19 at 2:30.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 99,075 S. 102,588

AUG 12 1962

LUKAS FOSS will conduct his own composition, "Time Cycle" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Adele Addison, soprano soloist, at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 19, at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

AUG 12 1962

Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony's first violist, will be the soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" at Tanglewood Friday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771

AUG 11 1962

—Six events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center during the seventh week beginning with the concert by the Conductor's Orchestra in the Music Shed on Monday, August 13 at 8 p.m., and continuing on Tuesday with a concert by the Center Orchestra at 8 p.m. Thursday, August 16 at 4 p.m. a chamber music concert by students will be at the Chamber Music Hall and at 8 p.m. the Tanglewood Choir will present a choral music program in the Theatre. On Friday, at 3:15 p.m., Lukas Foss will give a lecture and demonstration on his time Cycle, four songs for soprano and orchestra. On Sunday, August 19 at 10 a.m. a student chamber music program will be heard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mirror
HINGHAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,400

AUG 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,620

AUG 16 1962

Adele Addison, soprano, heard two seasons ago on the South Shore Concert Association series of concerts, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood next Sunday afternoon. Lucas Foss will conduct the orchestra in his 'Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra.'

NEWS BUREAU
Y. N.Y.
PAPER
INGS
EW YORK
RVICE

...ker News
... 16, 1962

THE AISLE SEAT

Long-Hair Gets a Pull from Jazz

By TED STRONGIN

"TIME CYCLE," the work by Lukas Foss that uses jazz methods for "long-hair" purposes, is back at Tanglewood in a new form.

Adele Addison will sing it, Mr. Foss himself will conduct it, the Boston Symphony will play it, at tomorrow's concert, 2:30 p. m.

This is the version that originally was scheduled for last summer. Instead, then, "Time Cycle" appeared in chamber form on a Fromm Foundation concert.

In still another form, "Time Cycle" was made into a dance at the Stratford Shakespeare festival this summer.

The work intersects jazz practices in that it leaves room for improvisation. The "long-hair" player is called on to use equal imagination with the jazz player; within the broad limits set by the composer.

Mr. Foss, this season, is acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Department of Composition. He is jostling Tanglewood practices a bit. They need jostling.

The newest "jostle" comes at 3:15 p. m. Friday with a Fromm Foundation sponsored concert of contemporary music. "This is the most advanced program we have ever had at Tanglewood," says Mr. Foss.

ADELE ADDISON: She'll sing 'Time Cycle.'

Among the works to be played are Ralph Shapey's "Evocations" (Mr. Shapey is on the staff of the Bennington Composers Conference, now meeting for two weeks in Vermont); Earl Brown's "Available Forms No. 3" and Morton Feldman's "For Franz Kline."

Mr. Shapey, Mr. Feldman and Mr. Brown will all be on hand to say a few words about their respective works. Mr. Feldman is a prominent exponent of composing according to techniques that make use of the laws of chance: Happenstance intersection of certain elements; certain other elements decided by tossing a coin, for instance. There are many variations.

In any case, Mr. Foss seems to be pushing the Tanglewood image a little "farther out," at least on the composing side of the summer school.

Let's hope some of the new horizon-seeking reflects back next season on the main Tanglewood activity, namely Boston Symphony concerts.

★ ★ ★

ONE DAY each summer Tanglewood turns itself over to youth. On that day, the aspirations and accomplishments of the students working there are exposed to the public. It is one of the best days of the year.

This year, the Gala Evening at Tanglewood is set for Thursday of next week. The grounds open at 3 p.m. The first event is a concert of chamber music at 4 p.m. Music by Tanglewood student composers is heard at 5 p.m.; a fanfare at 6:45 announces the Tanglewood choir concert. At 8 p.m. Richard Burgin conducts the student orchestra and chorus.

The period between 6 and 8:45 p.m. is officially designated as Picnic Hour. Bring your own or buy a box supper at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

★ ★ ★

THE TANGLEWOOD GALA evening and also the annual Boston Pops concert held earlier are both for the benefit of a worthy cause, the Revolving Scholarship Fund. The fund is the main source of aid to students at the Berkshire Music Center (the official name of the school, just as Berkshire Music Festival is the official name of the concerts at Tanglewood)

Main support of the fund comes from an organization called The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Let's leave the obvious and important question aside of the great worthiness of the cause. Let's see merely what you get by being a "Frend."

To become a "Friend," give Tanglewood a gift of money. You will receive in return, free admission to more than 40 special events on the Tanglewood grounds, some of them equal in interest to the main Boston Symphony events.

This is what the "Friends" get next week alone: Tuesday: Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert. Thursday: the whole Gala day described above. Friday: Seminar in Contemporary Music. Sunday, August 19, Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert.

The moral is obvious: Be a "Friend." It's a great musical bargain. It's a great boost to young musicians.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

SEP 2 1962

MEMENTO FROM THE MAESTRO—At Tanglewood in Lenox, Charles Munch, retiring himself as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, presents gifts to two orchestra members, Jacobus Langendoed, left, retiring after 42 years as 'cellist, and Richard Burgin, retiring after 42 years as concertmaster.

112

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 20 1962

Copy of Honegger Symphony Is Presented to Dr. Munch

LENOX — Dr. Charles Munch, who will retire Sunday as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was honored by more than 200 friends at a reception given yesterday afternoon at Saranak by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the late conductor of the BSO and founder of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

During the reception, which followed Sunday afternoon's concert in the Music Shed, Mrs. Koussevitzky presented to Dr. Munch a specially bound and inscribed copy of Arthur Honegger's Fifth Symphony. The original manuscript is in the Serge Koussevitzky musical collection in the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. The work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and was introduced to the world by Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Given by Mrs. Koussevitzky

In presenting the copy of the score to Dr. Munch in the music room at Saranak, Mrs. Koussevitzky said:

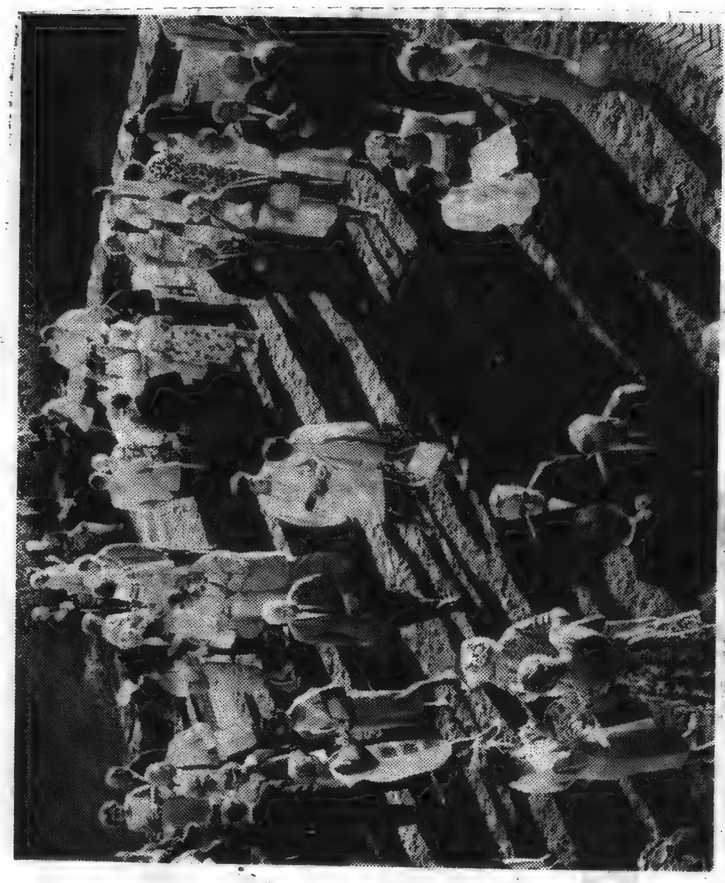
"Twelve years ago you came to this house left empty with the passing of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center. You came and you brought a word of comfort and confidence that the Berkshire Music Center will live on. As a great musician you understood its importance to the musical world, to musical youth and to the trustees of Tanglewood. Twelve is a symbolic number. Today we are assembled here in your honor and in recognition of 12 significant years of your directorship of the Berkshire Music Center. I say significant, because, through the years, you have helped to preserve its life and assure its future.

"In the presence of friends and members of the Tanglewood faculty, I greet you and thank you from the depth of my heart. I also gratefully recall the afternoon in this house when you invited the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to participate in the 75th anniversary celebration of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the joint commissioning of new works by internationally known composers.

"As this had been initiated by Serge Koussevitzky for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, for this, for your memorable performances of commissioning contemporary works, for your art and magnificent contribution to musical life, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation presents to you this specially bound copy of the score of Arthur Honegger's Fifth Symphony. I present it to you on this day as a symbol of unending friendship, admiration, gratitude and affection."

Many Messages Received

Several messages for Dr. Munch were received during the reception from internationally famous personalities in the musical world, including Pablo Casals, who is now in France; Carlos Shavez of Mexico; Samuel Barber; Aaron Copland; Howard Hansen; the French embassies in Washington and Ottawa; officials of the Lincoln Center in New York; ASCAP; Victor Records; Dr. Louis Perry, former chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and his son-in-law, William Cox, chairman of the Friends of the BMC; and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Schweitzer and other relatives of Dr. Munch's from Europe.



Photos by Mitchell

MORE THAN 200 guests mingled on the terrace at the reception for Dr. Munch, who will retire next Sunday after 13 years as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He succeeded Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who was the conductor of the BSO for 25 years and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, the BSO summer school.

Mrs. Koussevitzky Honors Retiring BSO Conductor

PRESENTATION of a copy of the score of Honegger's fifth symphony is made by Mrs. Koussevitzky to Dr. Munch on behalf of Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Original score is in Library of Congress, Washington.

GARDEN PARTY to honor Dr. Charles Munch, retiring BSO conductor, was given by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, at her Stockbridge home, Saranak, after yesterday's Tanglewood concert. William Judd chats with Mrs. Gary Graffman, Mr. Graffman and Mrs. Gerald Judd Jr., all of New York. Mr. Graffman, noted pianist, was soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

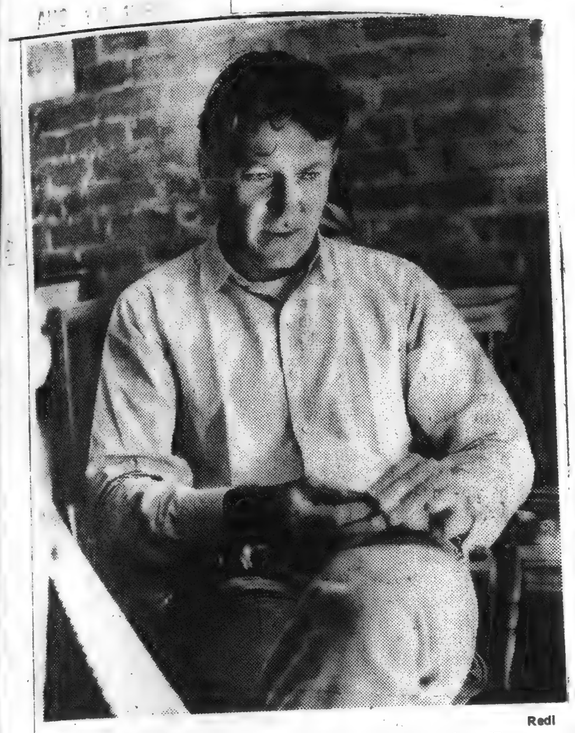
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 1 5 1962



Redl

LEON KIRCHNER, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his own composition, "Sinfonia," at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Friday night at 8 in the Music Shed. Charles Munch, who rested last weekend, rehearsed with the BSO today in preparation for Friday's concert, when he will conduct works by Berlioz and Mendelssohn. Munch also will conduct Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580

AUG 1 6 1962

Ormandy Will Lead Symphony Saturday

Accepts Second Invitation of Dr. Munch

Leon Kirchner Will Conduct His Own Sinfonia At Tanglewood On Friday. —Addison, de Pasquale, Graffman and Istomin Will Be Soloists During Programs This Week End.

The seventh week of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox will feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Dr. Charles Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday at 8:00 p. m. Saturday's program and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood on August 10 are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, Dr. Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own Sinfonia. Mr. Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and is presently at Harvard University as professor of music.

Dr. Munch will conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's Symphony No 5 in D minor ("Reformation"). This concert will conclude with the "Harold in Italy" symphony with viola by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Mr. Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B flat minor, at the festival concert on Saturday. Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat minor, Op. 111 by Prokofiev.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10:00 a. m. on Saturday.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the concert on Sunday at 2:30 with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra. Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch conducting. Mr. Graffman will play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

Today at 4:00 p. m. there will be a concert of chamber music by the students in the Chamber Music Hall, and tonight at 8:00 in the Theatre the Tanglewood Choir will present a program of choral music. The Aspects of Music seminar will be held on Friday at 3:15, when Lukas Foss will give a lecture and demonstration on his Time Cycle. Sunday's student chamber music program will be given at 10:00 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
[illegible], August 13, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
[illegible], August 6, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 293,118

AUG 11 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

AUG 13 1962

Dr. Munch Will Conduct Concert at Lenox Friday

Leon Kirchner has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct his own "Sinfonia" at the Berkshire Festival program Friday at 8 p.m. at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Kirchner, professor of music at Harvard University, is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty.

* * *

DR. MUNCH will conduct the balance of the program Friday which will include the Mendelssohn "Symphony number 5 in D minor ('Reformation')." The concert will conclude with the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" symphony with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Eugene Ormandy will make his second appearance of the season as guest conductor for the Saturday night program. Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto number 1, in B flat Minor." The program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the "Classical Symphony, opus 25" and the "Symphony number 6 in E flat minor, opus 111," by Prokofieff.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a.m. Saturday.

* * *

DR. MUNCH and the Boston Symphony will open the concert Sunday at 2:30 p.m. with the Schubert "Symphony number 5 in B flat." With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his "Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra." Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch conducting. Graffman will play the Brahms "Piano Concerto number 1," which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

* * *

THE NOVA ARTE Trio will be heard at the Wednesday evening chamber music concert in the theater. Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the assisting artists in a program consisting of the "Flute Sonata, opus 94," Prokofiev; Mozart's "Divertimento, K, 563" and the Brahms "Piano Quartet, opus 26."

LEON KIRCHNER
To Lead 'Sinfonia'

* * *

EVENTS OPEN to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center this week include a concert by the Conductor's Orchestra in the Music Shed tonight at 8 o'clock. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will present a concert tomorrow at 8 p.m. Students will present a chamber music program Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall and the Tanglewood Choir will present a program of choral music at 8 p.m. Thursday in the theater. The Aspects of Music seminar will be held Friday at 3:15 p.m. with Lukas Foss giving a lecture and demonstration on his "Time Cycle." A student chamber music program will be presented Sunday at 10 a.m. in the chamber Music Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,304

AUG 1 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,219

AUG 1 6 1962

Ormandy, Istomin At Tanglewood Saturday, Aug. 18

For the second time this summer Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The concert will take place Saturday, Aug. 18 at 8 p.m. Eugene Istomin will play Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. Ormandy's program will include the Classical Symphony and Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

A concert Friday, Aug. 17 will feature Leon Kirchner conducting his own Sinfonia, as well as Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5 ("Reformation"), and the "Harold in Italy" symphony by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist.

114

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

AUG 12 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
1962

Berkshire Festival Programs For Week

Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening at 8:00 at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood. The program, Ormandy's second of the season as guest conductor, will include the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, wtih Eugene Istomin as soloist; the "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat minor, Op. 111, by Prokofiev.

Other Programs

Pierre Monetux will conduct the concert this afternoon at 2:30 in the Music Shed. He is substituting for Dr. Munch who is indisposed. The program has not been announced.

The Nova Arte Trio will play Wednesday at the chamber music concert in the theater. Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute of the Boston Symphony, will be the assisting artists in the Flute Sonata, Op. 94 by Prokofiev, Mozart's Divertimento, K. 563, and Brahms' Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

The concert on Friday, Aug. 17, will feature the Leon Kirchner Sinfonia, under the direction of Kirchner. Dr. Munch will conduct the balance of the program: Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5 in D minor ("Reformation"); Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will be given in the Music Shed at 10 a.m., Saturday.

Dr. Munch will conduct the Sunday, Aug. 19, program, which begins at 2:30. The concert will include Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat; Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, with Gary Graffman as soloist. Lukas Foss will conduct his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, with Adele Addison as soloist.

Friends' Events

Six events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center during the week, beginning with the concert by the Conductor's Orchestra in the Music Shed on Monday at 8 p.m. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will present a concert Tuesday at 8 p.m. On Thursday at 4 p.m. there will be a concert of chamber music by the students in the Chamber Music Hall, and that evening at 8 p.m. in the Theater the Tanglewood Choir will present a program of choral music.

The Aspects of Music seminar will be held on Friday at 3:15 p.m., at which Lukas Foss will give a lecture and demonstration on his Time Cycle. Sunday's (Aug. 19) student chamber music program will be given at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

Concertmaster Says Au Revoir, But Not Goodby

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

Richard Burgin has worked under Charles Munch, Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the last 42 years.

Dean of the nation's concertmasters, he is retiring this weekend at Tanglewood from concertmaster duties.

However, in an interview during the weekend, Mr. Burgin said he isn't ready "just yet" to compare the three conductors.

One reason why of course, he explains, is that he will be continuing in his duties as associate conductor of the orchestra. Mr. Burgin will conduct the orchestra during nine performances this winter in Boston. In addition he will be guest conductor at the Boston University and in Syracuse with the Friends of Chamber Music Orchestra.

And the second reason why he won't compare "just yet" is, as he says:

★ ★ ★

"I'M OFTEN asked this question. But you have to understand that being with a conductor is a very personal thing. They're different like people are. But it's a very personal relationship."

Mr. Burgin does say that Conductor Munch is "a very amiable person to deal with."

The other question Mr. Burgin is often asked by Tanglewood music-goers is "What does a concertmaster do exactly?"

To this he replies, "He's a member of the orchestra except that he's called upon to play the solos." Of course this reply is one born of modesty. For as first chair violinist the concertmaster is liaison between conductor and the orchestra's vast string section. And, in addition, the concertmaster helps set the pace.

★ ★ ★

A NATIVE OF WARSAW, Mr. Burgin's 42 year span with the orchestra started in 1920 when he was 27. Conductor Pierre Monteux, the orchestra's music director from 1919 to 1924, appointed the young violinist to the concertmaster post. (Joseph Silverstein, who succeeds Mr. Burgin as concertmaster at the end of this week's Tanglewood season, is 29.)

Conductor Serge Koussevitzky named Mr. Burgin associate conductor in 1935 and associate director in 1943. Conductor Charles Munch continued him as associate when he took over as director of the orchestra 13 seasons ago.

Mr. Burgin's successor as concertmaster has the same quality of youth Mr. Burgin did when he entered the musical world as a violinist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra in 1903. He was only 10 years old at the time.

His successor, Mr. Silverstein, joined the second violin section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1955 at the age of 23.

He was the youngest member of the orchestra at the time.

FOND FAREWELLS—Their long years of association comes to an end, three musicians gather to say goodby at Tanglewood. Richard Burgin, right, ends his 42 years as Boston Symphony Orchestra concertmaster, but remains as its associate conductor. Charles Munch, center, is retiring after 13 years as music director, and Jacobus Langendoen, left, is leaving after 42 years as cellist. They were honored by the other orchestra members at a Luncheon.

CAIRO, N.Y. HERALD
W 350

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

AUG 23 1962

A scene at Tanglewood in Lenox, where the 25th season of the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is nearing its close.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 21 1962

Whitestone

BERKSHIRE TRIBUTE to BSO conductor Charles Munch was paid after Saturday rehearsal at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Hills Conference in the form of a silver tray. From left are John V. Geary, Conference executive director; Dr. Munch; Peter Guille and Ernest J. Brundage, Conference board members; and Boston Symphony Orchestra Manager Thomas E. Perry Jr.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Tuesday, August 14, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MILLERTON NEWS REPUBLICAN
Thursday, August 9, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192
AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,197
AUG 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 13 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
AUG 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
WALLINGFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,134
AUG 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
AUG 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
NORTH HAVEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 1,500
AUG 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350
AUG 16 1962

SUFFERN, N.Y.
ROCKLAND INDEPENDENT
W. 3,302
AUG 16 1962

RAVENA, N.Y.
NEWS-HERALD
W. 1,700
AUG 17 1962

AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
D- 13,734
AUG 11 1962

ATHENS, N.Y.
HERALD
W 325
AUG 16 1962

CHATHAM, N.Y.
COURIER
W. 3,870
AUG 16 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,450
AUG 11 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
AUG 14 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D: 43,126
AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,063
AUG 11 1962

GREENVILLE LOCAL
Wednesday, August 15, 1962

ISTOMIN, TANGLEWOOD SOLOIST

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as Guest Conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Charles Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert on Saturday, August 18. Saturday's program, which begins at 8 p.m., and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood on August 10 are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, August 17, Charles Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own Sinfonia. Mr. Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and is presently at Harvard University as Professor of Music.

Doctor Munch will conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's No. 5 in D Minor (Reformation). This concert will conclude with Harold in Italy, Symphony with Viola Solo by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Eugene Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B flat minor, at the Berkshire Festival concert on Saturday. Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the Classical Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat minor, Op. 111 by Prokofiev.

An Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a.m. on Saturday.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the concert on Sunday, August 19 at 2:30 with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra. Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Mr. Graffman will play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Saturday, August 11, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SUNDAY INDEPENDENT
August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
HERALD RECORDER
August 11, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ATHENS HERALD
August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
HERALD STATESMAN
August 15, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 17, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, August 9, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GREENVILLE LOCAL
Wednesday, August 15, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Tuesday, August 14, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
MILLERTON NEWS REPUBLICAN
Thursday, August 9, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192
AUG 10 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,197
AUG 10 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
AUG 11 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 11 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 13 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
AUG 12 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
WALLINGFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,134
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 11 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 9 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
AUG 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
AUG 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,453
AUG 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
NORTH HAVEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 1,500
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350
AUG 16 1962

SUFFERN, N.Y.
ROCKLAND INDEPENDENT
W. 3,302
AUG 16 1962

RAVENA, N.Y.
NEWS-HERALD
W. 1,700
AUG 17 1962

AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
D. 13,734
AUG 11 1962
1962

ATHENS, N.Y.
HERALD
W 325
AUG 16 1962

CHATHAM, N.Y.
COURIER
W. 3,870
AUG 16 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,450
AUG 11 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
AUG 14 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 43,126
AUG 15 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,963
AUG 11 1962

ISTOMIN, TANGLEWOOD SOLOIST

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will feature the second concert this season with Eugene Ormandy as Guest Conductor. Mr. Ormandy has accepted Charles Munch's invitation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert on Saturday, August 18. Saturday's program, which begins at 8 p.m., and the earlier appearance at Tanglewood on August 10 are Mr. Ormandy's only summer conducting engagements.

For the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, August 17, Charles Munch has extended an invitation to Leon Kirchner to conduct his own Sinfonia. Mr. Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and is presently at Harvard University as Professor of Music.

Doctor Munch will conduct the balance of Friday's concert, which includes Mendelssohn's No. 5 in D Minor (Reformation). This concert will conclude with Harold in Italy, Symphony with Viola Solo by Berlioz, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Eugene Ormandy has invited Eugene Istomin to be his guest for a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B flat minor, at the Berkshire Festival concert on Saturday. Mr. Ormandy's program, devoted to Russian music, will also include the Classical Symphony, Op. 25, and the Symphony No. 6, in E flat minor, Op. 111 by Prokofiev.

An Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will take place in the Music Shed at 10 a.m. on Saturday.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the concert on Sunday, August 19 at 2:30 with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. With Adele Addison as soloist, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra. Gary Graffman returns to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer as soloist with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Mr. Graffman will play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, which will be the concluding portion of Sunday's program.

116

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Monday, August 13, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, August 14, 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,867 S. 31,200
AUG 13 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 21,457
AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
AUG 9 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,450
AUG 14 1962

Graffman, Soloist at Berkshire

Gary Graffman, described as "the peregrinating pianist" by the New York Herald Tribune, will make two appearances during the seventh week of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.).

His concert, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on Sunday at 2:30, will mark the twenty-first occasion in which Graffman has been soloist with the orchestra.

The 33-year-old artist has traveled far along international musical routes. Within the past six years Graffman's career has taken him to Europe eight times, to South America twice, and to Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Hong Kong, and India. This season is no different, as Graffman made his Lewisohn Stadium debut early in August, then traveled to Tanglewood for the third consecutive summer.

Following his appearances here, Graffman departs for a European tour which will be interrupted by concerts with the New York Philharmonic during the opening week of Lincoln Center. The conclusion of his three months in Europe will signal the beginning of an American tour next winter.

At Tanglewood this week Graffman will first appear tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the chamber music program with the Nova Arts Trio and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Principal Flute with the Boston Spmphony. He will be heard in the Brahms Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

Graffman's engagement with the Boston Symphony on Sunday will be a performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1. RCA Victor has released a recording of this concerto with Gary Graffman and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
AUG 16 1962

Pianist Gary Graffman will be soloist with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Sunday. He will play Brahms' First Piano Concerto.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
AUG 18 1962

Gary Graffman

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 20 1962

Tanglewood Draws 25,464 on Weekend

Tanglewood drew 25,464 music lovers over the weekend. Five hundred fewer attended on the same weekend a year ago. The audience was 7,827 yesterday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 21 1962

Whitestone

JUBILANT after their performance in the Music Shed at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon are Adele Addison, soprano soloist and Lukas Foss, guest conductor. Mr. Foss composed the "Time Cycle" which was commissioned for Miss Addison by the Ford Foundation and performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Sunday afternoon concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Richard Burgin Retiring As Concertmaster of BSO

FORTY-TWO years ago Pierre Monteux appointed Richard Burgin concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This position of eminence among musicians was a formidable challenge for a talented young man of 27 who had just recently come to the United States from the concert stages of Europe.

But with his skill as a musician and a director Burgin proved his competence in the position. Boston and America soon learned the legend of Richard Burgin that was already well known in Europe. As a pupil of Joachim and Leopold Auer he made his debut at the age of 10 and astounded his teachers with his virtuoso playing. At 19 Mr. Burgin was engaged as concertmaster at Helsinki and after three years moved on to the same post at Oslo.

* * *

WHILE AT OSLO Mr. Burgin was invited by Monteux to come to America, and he continued his brilliant career with the Boston Symphony. In 1935 he was made assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and later became its associate conductor, the position he continues to hold today.

Mr. Burgin has conducted the Boston Symphony on 323 occasions, including 7 world premieres, 6 United States premieres, and 25 first-Boston performances.

As a teacher he has a host of students who will attest to his skill and devotion to teaching the art of music to the young. Burgin is a charter member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center where student violinists, chamber music players, and conductors have benefited from his knowledge of music.

* * *

MR. BURGIN'S colleagues in the orchestra hold him in very high esteem, but they

Boris and Milton

Richard Burgin

cannot resist telling some delightful stories at his expense. Richard Burgin is affected with what most people call absentmindedness, but Harrison Keller more appropriately calls "concentration."

The next time you come to a Tanglewood concert, watch carefully when the conductor calls for muted strings. You will see Alfred Krips, the assistant concertmaster, withdraw his own mute, but at the same time place another mute on the music stand. Burgin will quickly reach over and attach it to his violin. Always forgetting to carry a mute with him to concerts, Mr. Burgin relies on the thoughtfulness of his fellow player. Once Burgin was given an entire satchel full of mutes, but at the next concert the ritual of Krips-to-Burgin mute passing continued as usual. The concertmaster admitted he had lost the entire satchel!

On one occasion Mr. Burgin arrived for a concert in Concord, Massachusetts—when he should have been in Concord, New Hampshire. Another time a member of the orchestra had to sit out a concert because he was the same size as Mr. Burgin who had forgotten a rather essential piece of clothing.

* * *

AT THE CLOSE of the Tanglewood season Richard Burgin steps down as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony and turns his chair over to Joseph Silverstein. Mr. Burgin will continue in his position as associate conductor.

Emily Coleman writing in Newsweek quoted Mr. Burgin: "Monteux brought me here; Koussevitsky was my friend; and to you Charles Munch, my friend of 13 years, I say, 'Brother, we've never had it so good.'"

Neither have we, Richard Burgin, and our heartfelt thanks.

7th. WEEK REVIEWS.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

At Tanglewood

Foss Work Climaxes Next-to-Last Weekend

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The seventh and penultimate weekend of the Tanglewood Festival made a dramatic opening Friday evening with a Sinfonia conducted by the composer, Leon Kirchner.

Mr. Kirchner, who was a faculty member at Tanglewood a couple of years ago, is not only a distinguished composer, but a rather fine conductor as well. It is worth noting that when a composer does conduct his own work, he is usually too close to being most subjective and most objective to succeed; yet twice this weekend, Mr. Kirchner one and Foss the other, showed more than surprising grasp and dispatch of a most difficult situation.

Despite unnerving thunder in the air and noisy rain on the Shed roof, the composer took his stance and drove the clean, professional and altogether charming music through its live, new and distinctly interesting patterns like a veteran.

Munch Returns

Though this spell of fine composition was broken by Mendelssohn's Reformation Symphony, so reminiscent of a Gilbert and Sullivan tour de force, the musicianship and sound enjoyment was made even greater by the return of Charles Munch to the podium. Acting once more as a man in the prime of life with no thought to retiring, he seemed to fully enjoy the pompous solidity of the symphony written for the Tercentenary of the Augsburg Confession. While the music never had a better chance of success, to many it appears to live only in that the Roman Catholic "Dresden Amen" in the introduction followed as it is by an allegro con fuoco, denotes a ferocious sectarian struggle" that is some fun at a good distance.

Berlioz's Harold in Italy with its haunting, nostalgic themes was given a most superb performance. The Byronic reference to Childe Harold's fling in Italy is only title deep, since the trip was for this work made by Berlioz's own poetic wanderings. The viola solo to this symphony, so strangely nasal with the instrument's F-hole facing the audience, was yet with its wistful shephard's horn effect a guarantee that as long as violists as great as Mr. de Pasquale's ilk perform the work, so will it endure. The unmonotonous monotony of the soothing, slightly varied viola arpeggios that "accompanied" the orchestra in the third movement serenade, were to the last open string a most marvelous air-borne intoxicant.

Prokofiev's light spirited Classical Symphony, which surely Mozart would appreciate despite some expected difficulties with the dissonance, was rather raggedly performed. When the evening's conductor, Eugene Ormandy continued the all-Russian program with Prokofiev's 6th with what appeared to be redoubled energy to tie up loose ends, the results were now ponderous and ragged.

Tchaikovsky Work

Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 after intermission was unfortunately no better off.

When in 1874 Nicholas Rubinstein told Tchaikovsky the work was "unpianistic," "tawdry" and "derivative," Hans von Bulow told the composer it was "original," "noble" and "powerful" — even "ripe," and then in 1878 Bulow performed its world premiere with the Boston Symphony. Saturday's performance with Istomin at the piano was less than perpetuating. Though his fingers struck more notes than he was paid to sound, these results plus the conductor's drive for more orchestral reverberation, left little bounty for ear or mind. Perhaps the "rest" that Mr. Ormandy remarked last year Tchaikowsky needed would indeed be worth a try.

Though Schubert, the inventor of song (with this week chickadees in the Shed eaves), and Brahms, the champion of romantic classicism, were Sunday under Munch given sensitive and brilliant readings, the piece de resistance was wholly that of Lukas Foss' Time Cycle. To leave no slight, however, on the performance of Gary Graffman, the difficult work was given a warm and sensuous performance. And as it has been said of Brahms though his music is not by any means lascivious, it does on occasion display "Some latent heat beneath a formal exterior."

Miss Addison Sings

The Foss work, commissioned for Adele Addison by the Ford Foundation Humanities and Arts Program, was first performed in 1961 in New York under Leonard Bernstein when it received the Music Critic's Award. The chamber version with improvised episodes performed at Tanglewood last season, was at this Sunday's concert the original scored orchestra without the less-than-compelling episodes.

The literary theme, which has little to do with Foss' 40th birthday last Wednesday, is still tied to riddle-like lines as W. H. Auden's "clocks do not show the time of day." There is, however, a line from Kafka's Diaries, akin to birthdays, that did first inspire the work that Foss translates: "The clocks do not synchronize: the inner one chases in an inhuman manner, the outer one goes haltingly at its usual pace." That is perhaps too readily understood.

That the work is a moving one is of little doubt, but the performance in itself was breathtakingly beautiful. The singing of Adele Addison is unmatchable in either quality or intelligence; the purity of tone, the magnificent intonation, ease and sure delivery are but few reasons that despite the magnificent work itself, one feels it may have far less success in repertoire without this amazing voice and person there to sing it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 18 1962

Music: Munch Conducts At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend was launched by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Tanglewood with a provocative contemporary work and two standard scores that served as antidotes.

An audience of 4,294 responded with unfeigned approval to Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 5 in D Minor, Opus 107, "Reformation," conducted by Charles Munch. Joseph DePasquale was violin soloist in the Berlioz.

Opening work was Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia" (First movement only) conducted by the composer.

Teaching at Harvard

Kirchner is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. This is the summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is presently teaching at Harvard University.

This summer at Tanglewood, Boston Symphony director Munch has pursued two policies that, on the surface, appear to glow with goodness, consideration, and prosperity.

One has been the featuring of Boston Symphony players as soloists. In every case the results have been felicitous, including last night's performance by DePasquale.

The other brave and highly debatable practice is the performance of fresh-from-the-cocoon work that give dazzling opportunity to composers, but are not in audience interest. Kirchner's "Sinfonia" is not quite as fresh as most, having been written in 1949.

Brief Work

Most commendable factor for the inclusion of Kirchner's work, on last night's program, was its brevity. It took about 10 minutes to play. Also, it was gotten out of the way at the beginning of the program. "Sinfonia" gets off to a wailing start. Last night it was coincidentlly accompanied by the start of the downpour and thunder.

There's a prominent score for harp and piano, and percussive appurtenances over which screaming woodwinds and strings seek to be heard. The work lapses into more and different cacophony, with a quiet duet for piano and flute as recess.

Following Munch's two-week vacation from the Podium, we've rarely seen him in better fettle. We've certainly never heard a more vigorous performance of Mendolsshon's "Reformation." After the Kichne, it was also a fine restorative.

While it isn't one of Mendelssohn's most vital works, it has potentials of sound that Munch and the orchestra fully realized last night. There was a bright new sheen to the first movement, and a beautiful display of the "Dresden Amen." As if they had been released upon friendly and fertile ground, winds and strings played the notes to the hilt, almost to the point of boldness.

Munch gave strict form to the swift second movement and the orchestra obliged with impeccable technique and ringingly clear tone. Greatest excitement was, of course generated in the finale, the compelling "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" ranged from devotional utterance in its initial appearance in flute to a state of magnitude and pressure at the movement's close.

Second Appearance

This was DePasquale's second solo appearance in this festival. On July 14, he performed Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante with Ruth Posselt, violinist. Last night's score, Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," was a different form of challenge. Filled as it is with typically Berlioz "cliches," the work has fairly consistent interest in instrumental maneuvers and a healthy use of plausible melody.

DePasquale's tone glowed throughout, even in sections where the solo instrument almost suffers ignominity by having nothing more to play than dull, repeated figures. The soloist's bow was firmly applied, technique spotlessly clean and phrases formed with assurance and neatly marked punctuations.

Tonight, Eugene Ormandy returns for his second and last Tanglewood appearance this summer. The all-Russian program is Prokofieff's "Classical" and Sixth Symphonies; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B Flat Major, with Eugene Istomin as soloist. He will play the same work at the forthcoming Worcester Music Festival.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 20 1962

A Preview Of Pianist For Festival

By JOHN F. KYES

LENOX — The seventh weekend of the Berkshire Festival underwent weather of all types, and drew audiences of widely varying sizes. The concerts were very varied, especially with respect to the modern music presented.

Two composers conducted their own works; Leon Kirchner on Friday his Sinfonia, and Lukas Foss on Sunday his Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and orchestra, starring Adele Addison in a rather thankless role. Challenging, but much more rewarding to the average listener was Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony on Saturday, vividly delineated by the Boston Symphony under the guest leadership of Eugene Ormandy.

Charles Munch offered balm on Friday in Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," with lovely viola solos by Joseph de Pasquale, and on Sunday delighted the large audience with Schubert's Fifth Symphony and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, with Gary Graffman as the able soloist.

Festival Pianist

The stirring Saturday concert, which opened with Prokofiev's gay little "Classical" Symphony, ended with a fresh and authoritative performance of that warhorse, Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, in B flat minor. Eugene Istomin gave this reviewer an exciting preview of the Worcester Festival concert of Friday, October 19, when Istomin will play the same concerto with the Detroit Symphony under the baton of Paul Paray.

The cooperation of Ormandy and Istomin was perfect, and a fatherly kiss on the cheek of the pianist recalled that Istomin trained in Philadelphia at the Curtis Institute and has appeared many times with Ormandy. The guest leader was so happy over the way the Bostonians played for him, that he also bussed the cheek of Samuel Mayes, onetime Philadelphia first cellist, and shook the hands of various first desk men.

The "Classical" Symphony found the strings somewhat shrill, at the outset of a chilly evening but the tendency was conquered later.Ormandy sold Prokofiev to the throng as a composer who had all the knowledge and tricks to charm the erudite listener, and an earthy touch to make even the most untutored happy. Especially charming were the third movement's Gavotte and the Finale's velocity and sudden mirthful explosions in the midst of smooth 18th century filagree.

Prokofiev Sixth

The Prokofiev Sixth was masterfully let loose, the famous Ormandy ability to fling the choirs of the orchestra at each other producing strenuous but thrilling effects. The composer in this work let the less common instruments of lower or broader tones speak out with slangy idioms. The second movement, "Largo," had a noble sweep in spite of the fact that the dissonances and chromatic progressions were as much of the people as the Saturday night bathos of a workman crying in his beer.

The familiar Tchaikovsky concerto brought the audience to its feet, and Istomin and Ormandy were recalled many times.

The attendance of 8,224 was a high tribute to the leader and soloist, on an evening rather raw for lawn listeners.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 23 1962

TANGLEWOOD

~~Friday by D. D.~~

Drenching rain did not prevent a small but unusually responsive audience from enjoying one of the most satisfying evenings yet offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Leon Kirchner directed the first number on the program, his own work, entitled Sinfonia, giving a masterful rendition of a highly concentrated dose of dodecaphonic sound. An occasional return to more familiar elements of the classic system made the piece a bit more accessible to the uninitiated concertgoer.

Mendelssohn's little-performed Reformation Symphony under the baton of Dr. Munch was a delightful experience. The last movement, based on the Hymn tune A Mighty Fortress had few dull moments, thanks to the orchestra's brass choir.

Joseph de Pasquale, violist, turned a formidable interpretation of Harold in Italy of Berlioz. While not a show-piece for the viola, as Paganini had hoped, the work does demand consummate control of tone and nuance of phrasing. Mr. de Pasquale more than satisfied his audience in this respect.

Saturday by P. P.

On Saturday night at Tanglewood, Eugene Ormandy conducted a program consisting of two Prokofiev symphonies — the Classical and the Sixth — and Tchaikowsky's first Piano Concerto, brilliantly played by Eugene Istomin.

Though lasting only eleven minutes, the Classical Symphony is rich with light melodies. Its first movements — understated, precise — seems to speak a dry sort of humor in the interplay of strings and winds. The third movement, a gavotte, has the fullness of an open ballroom and the sparkle of crystal chandeliers. The finale, a rage of melodies, revealed the genial vigor of Ormandy's direction.

The Sixth symphony, a kind of musical dinosaur, bulks huge, and is built of slow, muscular rhythms. Ormandy's direction was masterful; his management of those brief, climactic passages, where a powerful rhythm comes suddenly from nowhere and fades almost immediately, was superb.

Eugene Istomin presented the familiar Tchaikovsky with characte and distinction.

Sunday by E. M.

Charles Munch and Lukas Foss joined Sunday afternoon to give Tanglewood listeners a program of startling range — almost one and one-half centuries. Following Dr. Munch's sure and forceful presentation of Schubert's Symphony No. 5, Mr. Foss took the baton to conduct his own Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, composed in 1960. Adele Addison was the soprano soloist.

Drawing on works by Auden, Housman, Kafa, and Nietzsche, the notably modern Time Cycle hints at the brevity, uncertainty, and mystery of life, heightened by the inexorable movement of time. Mr. Foss has used the soprano voice as an instrument, and his demands are staggeringly difficult. Miss Addison was equal to them, however, and she ranged over multiple octaves with clarity and power. Sometimes Oriental in its percussion, often powerful and mystical in its evocation, at times over-dramatic and consciously tortured Time Cycle remains challenging and arresting.

Dr. Munch concluded the program with Brahm's Piano Concerto No. 1, featuring Gary Graffman as soloist. The orchestra was outstanding throughout, particularly in the final rondo.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 18 1962

Music Review

Munch Returns to Podium

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE RETURN to the podium at Tanglewood last night of Charles Munch who had missed one concert last week on account of a temporary indisposition was greeted by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a devoted but small audience due to the storm, with hearty cordiality.

This was the first concert which the weather has seriously affected. There have been others in which unfavorable cold and rain had possibly restricted attendance in some measure but last night there was no chance whatsoever for anyone to remain beyond the protection of the Shed roof. Thus the attendance figure of 4,294 was really a tribute to the artists, for, in addition to Munch, there was Leon Kirchner conducting his own "Sinfonia" and Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy."

* * *

MUNCH was at his most benign in the Mendelssohn "Reformation" symphony, opus 107, his fifth, in D minor, and played it with affection and obviously intimate acquaintance with its lovely pages. Even in the allegro which follows the eloquent introduction he did not rise to a violence into which some are so often inveigled, but achieved his contrasts between the limits which the 20-year-old Mendelssohn imposed.

We take our Mendelssohn as filling a very definite niche in musical history but the little touches of genius which show up at unexpected moments, such as the long-sustained clarinet in the scherzo and the use of the magnificent contrabassoon in the impressive choral which begins the final movement, are continuing marvels.

Paganine owned an exquisite Stradivarius, and it was for this instrument that he commissioned Berlioz to write a concerto. However, Joseph de Pasquale played a Gaspar da Salo and the tone he drew from it was as gratifying as one may hope to hear from any string player. This is really a symphony and the viola soloist has insufficient opportunities in respect to the long tuttis for the orchestra but de Pasquale gave it a broad and authentic performance; his intonation was remarkably just and every note was articulated with intense security.

* * *

KIRCHNER'S conducting helped to convey to the audience the poetry and the unrelenting urgency which is the foundation of his music. He uses a very large orchestra, including a piano, and gives no one respite. This, in fact, was a factor which we would like to reexamine as it seemed to us that the violin line as the movement got going was overpowered by other instruments playing in the same tessitura.

Kirchner is no seeker of novelty for novelty's sake. He uses the resources of the orchestra to express surging emotions and not to conduct sounds per se. A short slow introduction has a chromatic structure which proceeds into a swifter movement and thereafter there is frequent alteration, involving the entire forces more often than not. An exception was an ascending ladder-like climb for the piano over which the flute is given a very graceful linear drape and in which the execution was conspicuously excellent. The members of the orchestra were as eager to express their enthusiasm to the composer (and conductor) as was the audience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 23 1962

Classical Symphony Good At Berkshire Festival

The seventh weekend of the extended Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood saw one of the smallest audiences, 1300, for Friday evening's concert. Charles Munch directed a telling performance of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first desk violist, as virtuoso soloist. The fifth symphony, Reformation, of Mendelssohn, not his most vital, but with an effective last movement chorale, based on Martin Luther's "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and a contemporary Sinfonia, conducted by the composer Kirchner, were included.

An eager audience of 8224 heard an all-Russian concert Saturday night, directed by Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, pays annual visits to the Boston Symphony. This concert was his second and last performance of the present season.

The first half of the concert consisted of two symphonies by Serge Prokofieve, the "Classical," Op. 25 and the sixth, in B flat major, Op. 111. The tow works were well chosen to demonstrate the different styles of Prokofiev's composition, the first representing a cross between an innocent mock of a late 18th century symphony, and simply a fanciful use of the classical form; the second, a Prokofiev original, so to speak, filled with all the richness and emotion that one might expect of the dynamic composer.

The Classical symphony was perhaps the better executed of the two works in its extreme clarity and freshness. The orchestra, although capturing the many mooids of the sixth symphony and capably unravelling its story, seemed to become unnecessarily heavy in parts and to have need of the passage of quicker tempo for relief.

Eugene Istomin was the guest artist of the second half of the concert, playing Tschaikovsky's well-known piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. On the whole the concerto was well played, the difficult passages accurately and expressively rendered, although more might have been desired in the exposition of the lighter themes of the work. The orchestra seemed well integrated with the soloist, providing, especially in the flute, oboe, cello, and horn solos of movement II, a most beautiful complement to Istomin's touch.

This afternoon and evening, starting at 3:00, at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Music Center will present chamber music, music by Tanglewood composers, and a choir concert for the benefit of their scholarship fund. Richard Burgin, retiring associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, in a gala evening of music by Mahler, (three movements from his third symphony), Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53, with Florence Kopleff as soloist, and the women of the Festival Chorus, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, with the men of the chorus. A picnic hour between 6:00 and 6:45 p.m. has been designated as usual, with patrons bringing their own suppers or purchasing them at the cafeteria on the grounds.

B.I.W.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

Orchestra Defeats Storm At Tanglewood Concert

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Rain, thunder and lightning failed to deter 4292 people from attending a notable concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood conducted Friday night by the ailing Charles Munch.

In spite of the elements, the fine program went off with considerable elan because of Munch's devotion to the music and the skill and cooperation of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert opened with a performance of Kirchner's Sinfonia conducted by the composer. Presumably this was a definitive performance, but it did not rest long in the mind after the solid worth of the "Reformation Symphony," conducted with meticulous attention to detail by Munch.

This is indeed lofty music which time has kept at its height. The magnificent phrases of old familiar hymns blended with the blare of percussions in a way that Kirchner's music never could attain. His blares were noisy, these were inspired.

The new generation speaks with less authority and conviction than the phrases of Mendelssohn's time. The "Reformation Symphony" is replete with truly magnificent melodies, and Munch made the most of each.

He conducted easily, as is his wont, but he never let the message of the composer be clouded. The audience was enraptured with the performance and made its joy known in unmistakable manner.

The final number on the program was "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz. This gave us opportunity to hear the magnificent playing of Joseph De Pasquale, one of the greatest artists of the Boston Symphony.

This work is really a story in music. Berlioz sums up his creation in these words: "I wished to write for the orchestra a series of scenes in which the solo viola should figure as a more or less active personage o constantly preserved individuality; I wished to put the viola in the midst of poetic recollections left me by my wanderings in the Abruzzi, and make it a sort o melancholy dreamer, after the manner of Byron's 'Childe Harold,' hence the title, 'Harold en Italie.'"

What the composer set out to accomplish, he accomplished with all the skill and passion at his command. There are such poignant phrases in this work, particularly those voiced by the viola, that this listener was not surprised to note more than one tear being shed in the audience, a tribute to both the composer and to Munch; to say nothing of De Pasquale's superb art.

Here is music that goes its own way, often gently, often with a violence that could almost be termed passion.

We noted in the audience soprano Adele Addison who will be heard Sunday in Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," commissioned for her by the Ford Foundation and being given its first full performance with orchestra Sunday at Tanglewood.

We heard Miss Addison sing a chamber version last year. It is not the most beautiful work in the world, but it is certainly one of the most difficult. We look forward to hearing it again.

Sunday afternoon the other soloist will be Gary Graffman in the First Piano Concerto of Brahms. Graffman seems physically and mentally equipped to play this work.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 23 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday by D. D.

Drenching rain did not prevent a small but unusually responsive audience from enjoying one of the most satisfying evenings yet offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Leon Kirchner directed the first number on the program, his own work, entitled Sinfonia, giving a masterful rendition of a highly concentrated dose of dodecaphonic sound. An occasional return to more familiar elements of the classic system made the piece a bit more accessible to the uninitiated concertgoer.

Mendelssohn's little-performed Reformation Symphony under the baton of Dr. Munch was a delightful experience. The last movement, based on the Hymn tune A Mighty Fortress had few dull moments, thanks to the orchestra's brass choir.

Joseph de Pasquale, violist, turned a formidable interpretation of Harold in Italy of Berlioz. While not a show-piece for the viola, as Paganini had hoped, the work does demand consummate control of tone and nuance of phrasing. Mr. de Pasquale more than satisfied his audience in this respect.

Saturday by P. P.

On Saturday night at Tanglewood, Eugene Ormandy conducted a program consisting of two Prokofiev symphonies — the Classical and the Sixth — and Tchaikowsky's first Piano Concerto, brilliantly played by Eugene Istomin.

Though lasting only eleven minutes, the Classical Symphony is rich with light melodies. Its first movements — understated, precise — seems to speak a dry sort of humor in the interplay of strings and winds. The third movement, a gavotte, has the fullness of an open ballroom and the sparkle of crystal chandeliers. The finale, a rage of melodies, revealed the genial vigor of Ormandy's direction.

The Sixth symphony, a kind of musical dinosaur, bulks huge, and is built of slow, muscular rhythms. Ormandy's direction was masterful; his management of those brief, climactic passages, where a powerful rhythm comes suddenly from nowhere and fades almost immediately, was superb.

Eugene Istomin presented the familiar Tchaikovsky with characte and distinction.

Sunday by E. M.

Charles Munch and Lukas Foss joined Sunday afternoon to give Tanglewood listeners a program of startling range — almost one and one-half centuries. Following Dr. Munch's sure and forceful presentation of Schubert's Symphony No. 5, Mr. Foss took the baton to conduct his own Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, composed in 1960. Adele Addison was the soprano soloist.

Drawing on works by Auden, Housman, Kafa, and Nietzsche, the notably modern Time Cycle hints at the brevity, uncertainty, and mystery of life, heightened by the inexorable movement of time. Mr. Foss has used the soprano voice as an instrument, and his demands are staggeringly difficult. Miss Addison was equal to them, however, and she ranged over multiple octaves with clarity and power. Sometimes Oriental in its percussion, often powerful and mystical in its evocation, at times over-dramatic and consciously tortured Time Cycle remains challenging and arresting.

Dr. Munch concluded the program with Brahm's Piano Concerto No. 1, featuring Gary Graffman as soloist. The orchestra was outstanding throughout, particularly in the final rondo.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 18 1962

Music Review

Munch Returns to Podium

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE RETURN to the podium at Tanglewood last night of Charles Munch who had missed one concert last week on account of a temporary indisposition was greeted by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a devoted but small audience due to the storm, with hearty cordiality.

This was the first concert which the weather has seriously affected. There have been others in which unfavorable cold and rain had possibly restricted attendance in some measure but last night there was no chance whatsoever for anyone to remain beyond the protection of the Shed roof. Thus the attendance figure of 4,294 was really a tribute to the artists, for, in addition to Munch, there was Leon Kirchner conducting his own "Sinfonia" and Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy."

* * *

MUNCH was at his most benign in the Mendelssohn "Reformation" symphony, opus 107, his fifth, in D minor, and played it with affection and obviously intimate acquaintance with its lovely pages. Even in the allegro which follows the eloquent introduction he did not rise to a violence into which some are so often inveigled, but achieved his contrasts between the limits which the 20-year-old Mendelssohn imposed.

We take our Mendelssohn as filling a very definite niche in musical history but the little touches of genius which show up at unexpected moments, such as the long-sustained clarinet in the scherzo and the use of the magnificent contrabassoon in the impressive choral which begins the final movement, are continuing marvels.

Paganine owned an exquisite Stradivarius, and it was for this instrument that he commissioned Berlioz to write a concerto. However, Joseph de Pasquale played a Gaspar da Salo and the tone he drew from it was as gratifying as one may hope to hear from any string player. This is really a symphony and the viola soloist has insufficient opportunities in respect to the long tutti for the orchestra but de Pasquale gave it a broad and authentic performance; his intonation was remarkably just and every note was articulated with intense security.

* * *

KIRCHNER'S conducting helped to convey to the audience the poetry and the unrelenting urgency which is the foundation of his music. He uses a very large orchestra, including a piano, and gives no one respite. This, in fact, was a factor which we would like to reexamine as it seemed to us that the violin line as the movement got going was overpowered by other instruments playing in the same tessitura.

Kirchner is no seeker of novelty for novelty's sake. He uses the resources of the orchestra to express surging emotions and not to conduct sounds per se. A short slow introduction has a chromatic structure which proceeds into a swifter movement and thereafter there is frequent alteration, involving the entire forces more often than not. An exception was an ascending ladder-like climb for the piano over which the flute is given a very graceful linear drape and in which the execution was conspicuously excellent. The members of the orchestra were as eager to express their enthusiasm to the composer (and conductor) as was the audience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 23 1962

Classical Symphony Good At Berkshire Festival

The seventh weekend of the extended Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood saw one of the smallest audiences, 4300, for Friday evening's concert. Charles Munch directed a telling performance of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first desk violist, as virtuoso soloist. The fifth symphony, Reformation, of Mendelssohn, not his most vital, but with an effective last movement chorale, based on Martin Luther's "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and a contemporary Sinfonia, conducted by the composer Kirchner, were included.

An eager audience of 8224 heard an all-Russian concert Saturday night, directed by Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, pays annual visits to the Boston Symphony. This concert was his second and last performance of the present season.

The first half of the concert consisted of two symphonies by Serge Prokofieve, the "Classical," Op. 25 and the sixth, in B flat major, Op. 111. The tow works were well chosen to demonstrate the different styles of Prokofiev's composition, the first representing a cross between an innocent mock of a late 18th century symphony, and simply a fanciful use of the classical form; the second, a Prokofiev original, so to speak, filled with all the richness and emotion that one might expect of the dynamic composer.

The Classical symphony was perhaps the better executed of the two works in its extreme clarity and freshness. The orchestra, although capturing the many moods of the sixth symphony and capably unravelling its story, seemed to become unnecessarily heavy in parts and to have need of the passage of quicker tempo for relief.

Eugene Istomin was the guest artist of the second half of the concert, playing Tschaikovsky's well-known piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. On the whole the concerto was well played, the difficult passages accurately and expressively rendered, although more might have been desired in the exposition of the lighter themes of the work. The orchestra seemed well integrated with the soloist, providing, especially in the flute, oboe, cello, and horn solos of movement II, a most beautiful complement to Istomin's touch.

This afternoon and evening, starting at 3:00, at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Music Center will present chamber music, music by Tanglewood composers, and a choir concert for the benefit of their scholarship fund. Richard Burgin, retiring associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a gala evening of music by Mahler, (three movements from his third symphony), Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53, with Florence Kopleff as soloist, and the women of the Festival Chorus, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration with the men of the chorus. A picnic hour between 6:00 and 6:45 p.m. has been designated as usual, with patrons bringing their own suppers or purchasing them at the cafeteria on the grounds.

H. T. W.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

Orchestra Defeats Storm At Tanglewood Concert

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Rain, thunder and lightning failed to deter 4292 people from attending a notable concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood conducted Friday night by the ailing Charles Munch.

In spite of the elements, the fine program went off with considerable elan because of Munch's devotion to the music and the skill and cooperation of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert opened with a performance of Kirchner's Sinfonia conducted by the composer. Presumably this was a definitive performance, but it did not rest long in the mind after the solid worth of the "Reformation Symphony," conducted with meticulous attention to detail by Munch.

This is indeed lofty music which time has kept at its height. The magnificent phrases of old familiar hymns blended with the blare of percussions in a way that Kirchner's music never could attain. His blares were noisy, these were inspired.

The new generation speaks with less authority and conviction than the phrases of Mendelssohn's time. The "Reformation Symphony" is replete with truly magnificent melodies, and Munch made the most of each.

He conducted easily, as is his wont, but he never let the message of the composer be clouded. The audience was enraptured with the performance and made its joy known in unmistakable manner.

The final number on the program was "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz. This gave us opportunity to hear the magnificent playing of Joseph De Pasquale, one of the greatest artists of the Boston Symphony.

This work is really a story in music. Berlioz sums up his creation in these words: "I wished to write for the orchestra a series of scenes in which the solo viola should figure as a more or less active personage o constantly preserved individuality; I wished to put the viola in the midst of poetic recollections left me by my wanderings in the Abruzzi, and make it a sort of melancholy dreamer, after the manner of Byron's 'Childe Harold,' hence the title, 'Harold en Italie.'"

What the composer set out to accomplish, he accomplished with all the skill and passion at his command. There are such poignant phrases in this work, particularly those voiced by the viola, that this listener was not surprised to note more than one tear being shed in the audience, a tribute to both the composer and to Munch; to say nothing of De Pasquale's superb art.

Here is music that goes its own way, often gently, often with a violence that could almost be termed passion.

We noted in the audience soprano Adele Addison who will be heard Sunday in Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," commissioned for her by the Ford Foundation and being given its first full performance with orchestra Sunday at Tanglewood.

We heard Miss Addison sing a chamber version last year. It is not the most beautiful work in the world, but it is certainly one of the most difficult. We look forward to hearing it again.

Sunday afternoon the other soloist will be Gary Graffman in the First Piano Concerto of Brahms. Graffman seems physically and mentally equipped to play this work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

Music: Ormandy Returns To Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy made a triumphant return to the Tanglewood podium last night, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend.

The highly enthused audience numbered 8,224.

Eugene Istomin was soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, opus 23, which he will play at the Worcester Music Festival in October.

Orchestral works were Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, opus 25, and Symphony No. 6 in E flat minor, opus 111.

Wide Contrasts

No two symphonies by one composer reveal wider character contrasts than these two by Prokofieff. Ormandy made this clear with the cooperation of an orchestra that apparently was in total agreement with his visions. Furthermore, we have never heard this great orchestra play more brilliantly.

Conductor and orchestra turned the "Classical" into a revelation of disarming brightness, and this is by no means to be attributed in bulk to the nature of the work.

There certainly was no harangguery in the "Classical." The first and final movements were taken a little too fast for complete articulation. Yet, phrases were finely chiseled — specific in point and purpose. The real tongue in cheek mockery appeared most effectively in the slow movement and gavotte. Ormandy conducted them as if he were instructing a graduate class in form and orchestral witticism. It was a beautiful satire on "powdered-wig" music.

The Sixth Symphony went from the brilliant comic strip to grand opera. Powerful undercurrents of agitation alternated between temperance and flaying severity. It ranged from the most genteel of sounds in the slow movement to sounds of Herculean strength in sounds of Herculean strenght in the finale.

No Lagging

Despite its uncommon length there was no lagging in the slow movement. At every point, Ormandy drew from the orchestra sounds of marvelous intrigue. Intricate harmonies and instrumental devices were not permitted to interfere with its song-like, however murky, character.

The finale was turned into a huzzah of sound splashes and aggressive rhythms. Strings, wood winds, bassoon and tuba each contributed inmeasurably to the dazzling results.

Applause rivalled the symphony's clangorous volume.

Grand Manner

Istomin played the Tchaikovsky Concerto in the grand manner. It was a tasteful performance at the same time. He bypassed no opportunity to make melodies sing to high heaven. The opening chords crashed properly but were not dealt with iron fists. Also, there were some wrong notes to mar the technical picture.

Nevertheless, storms of octaves and runs displayed admirable dexterity. But, above all, it was a musicianly performance and not a newly paved speedway for the old war horse.

This afternoon's program had a lively open rehearsal yesterday morning, attended by 3,765 who each paid $1.50 to benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Brahms Concerto

Charles Munch, orchestra and soloist Gary Graffman rehearsed Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Opus 15. The one stop in performance was for mechanical reason.

An F string broke in the piano's high register. The viola section took quite an interest in what had happened. Graffman went on, and at the end of the movement took time out to remove the broken string while Munch looked on. Concertmaster Alfred Krips rushed backstage to summon help and four stalwart gentlemen came out to view what appeared to be a disaster. They finally retired, having accomplished absolutely nothing, and the rehearsal went on.

Krips returned eventually, looking as if he'd been on a tragi mission, and picked up his part in mid-phrase.

Throughout the episode Graffman demonstrated admirable poise compared with the second rate pianist who threatened not to play his recent Tanglewood engagement because the instrument hadn't been "voiced" to his satisfaction. Also on the rehearsal agenda was Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," four songs for soprano and orchestra. Adele Addison was the soloist and will sing at this afternoon's performance. Foss will conduct. There was no mistaking the audience's positive reaction, or the Boston Symphony players' pungent comments at rehearsal intermission.

Also scheduled for this afternoon's concert is Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 19 1962

ORMANDY DRAWS AUDIENCE OF 8224 TO TANGLEWOOD

Eugene Istomin Performs First Piano Concerto By Tchaikovsky

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The lure of one of the few perfect evenings of this Berkshire Music Festival plus the opportunity to watch one of the great conductors of the century, Eugene Ormandy, and the opportunity to hear a sterling young pianist, Eugene Istomin as soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, to say nothing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drew 8224 people to the Music Shed Saturday night.

Scintillating Performance

That the entire concert met their expectations was made known in a most vociferous manner by people who had really enjoyed themselves.

Ormandy chose for his appearance three works by master Russian composers: Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky.

He opened the program with

(See ORMANDY DRAWS (Page 18)

and enlarges them with rare genius of a poet.

Ormandy, conducting without a score, was on the alert for every nuance, every tempo change, and in fact, he fairly drove the symphony along deep, deep into the listener's conscience.

The result was sheer bedlam. The audience went almost mad with delight and was still applauding as we left the shed. Of course the music had something to do with it.

Eugene Istomin is one of those rare modest geniuses who have something to offer and do it without pretense or bravado. From the crashing chords of the opening movement to the delicate tracery of the second movement, to the pyrotechnics of the finale, Istomin had everything under control.

Introspective Reading

The work was given a more introspective reading than one ometime hears, not as large-cale as some performances we ave heard.

Istomin made his points rough meticulous attention to etail. The result was that one eard beauties often missed in rge-scale performances. The eauty of this work does not epend upon the virility of the tterance as much as it does pon the poetic approach to any of its passages.

This was the third time that have heard Istomin play this ork. Each time I have marelled at his grasp and intellecual approach to it.

Magnificent Collaboration

There may have been some in e audience who had expected "Horowitzian" performance, hich this was not, but it served s purpose and the music adirably. It must have, because have not heard such an enusiastic response for a long me.

Ormandy and the Boston Symhony players provided magnifient collaboration, collaboration so honest and well met, that this concert turned out to be one of the finest of the series so far.

Adele Addison

Adele Addison sings today Lukas Foss' "Tife Cycle," a work commissioned for her by the Ford Foundation Humanities and Arts Program.

This is the first time it has been performed at Tanglewood with full orchestra. A chamber setting was used last season.

Miss Addison should draw a record crowd, for I think she has sung at the Berkshire Festival more often than any other soprano, and always has endeared herself to the Tanglewood audiences.

STAMFORD, Conn.
Circ. 26,432
AUG 20 1962

Advocate Music Festival At Tanglewood Nears End

There is nothing like a quick trip to Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., to make you live outside your normal time and savour the day — the hour — the minute — and the musical moments of the Berkshire Music Festival.

This past weekend drew particular attention to time as Lucas Foss conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Adele Addison in a work especially commissioned for her, Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle." The four songs about time included the lines by Auden: "We have no time until/ We know what time we fill . . ." In this memorable performance, even the precise movements of Mr. Foss were provocative of wonder about time. His almost mathematical conducting was certainly a contrast to the batonwork of Charles Munch and Eugene Ormandy, the major conductors during the weekend, and of Leon Kirchner, whose impressive Sinfonia opened the Friday concert in the shed.

One of the wonderful things about being at Tanglewood is that you hear a variety of music and see a number of outstanding artists in a short time. Mr. Ormandy's interpretation of Porkofiev's Sixth Symphony was a strong center of Saturday evening's concert. Eugene Istomin played "the" Tchaikovsky piano concerto; Gary Graffman, the first one by Brahms. The violist Joseph De Pasquale was soloist in "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz.

The weekend of variety was given an unusual cohesion by the composer's informal talks and the open rehearsals which allow several introductions to the same works.

This is the final week of the Berkshire Festival. A gala evening Thursday begins at 4 p.m. with a chamber concert, followed at 5 o'clock by a concert of music by young composers at Tanglewood. A fanfare at 6:45 announces the Tanglewood Choir, and the climaxing performance will be Mahler's Third Symphony, conducted by Richard Burgin and with Florence Kopleff, contralto.

Friday evening, Pierre Monteux will conduct; on Saturday and Sunday, Mr. Munch. The festival ends Sunday afternoon with its traditional performance of Beethoven's Ninth.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
AUG 21 1962

119

Two Pianists Sparkle At Tanglewood

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS.—The two talented young pianists, Eugene Istomin and Gary Graffman, gave Tanglewood audiences of more than 20,000 over the weekend two concerts of piano music they will long remember. With Dr. Charles Munch conducting Friday night and yesterday afternoon and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra as Saturday night's guest conductor, audiences had a rich variety of music ranging from Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky through Schubert, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Berlioz. In addition Leon Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" Friday evening and Sunday afternoon's audience heard Adele Addison sing Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" with the composer conducting. What started out as a week-end of heavy rain on Friday braved by 4,294 hardy musical souls ended with a beautiful Sunday afternoon of music listened to by 7,827.

Gary Graffman had Sunday afternoon's audience as thunderous in its applause as he had been in his forceful, powerful playing of Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor." His playing was slow and deliberate when needed, delicate and lyrical upon demand, sparkling toward the end, but for the most part, and this through long solo passages, possessed of a forthrightness and vigor that left no doubt of his talent. The audience left no doubt of the warmth of its appreciation.

Adele Addison, singing the "Time Cycle" of four songs for soprano and orchestra, earlier in the afternoon had received the warm applause of the audience. To this writer it seemed a partial waste of such fine voice and musical talent that both should have been spent on Lukas Foss' deeply serious but highly doubtful composition. Based on the writings of four deeply significant authors, Auden, Houseman, Kafka, and Nietszche, the music produces strangely weird and almost mad sounds putting the soprano through torture and leaving much to be desired. The delightful "Symphony No. 5" of Schubert with which the Sunday concert began was so much more appealing and appropriate for the sunny, sleepy afternoon.

Eugene Istomin's performance Saturday night before 8,224 was a scintillating, lyrical version of Tchaikovsky's "Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B-flat minor." The audience left no doubt about its enthusiastic reception of his vigorous, talented efforts. The applause was terrific and entirely deserved. The Boston had played with high success throughout the evening rising to every demand of Ormandy who drew wonderful moving effects from the strings in Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" and from the same composer's "Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor," a less-well known composition with many strange effects. Heard for the first time at Tanglewood it needs re-hearing and closer scrutiny but its performance was highly successful.

The brave souls who came out in Friday's teeming rain heard Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5, in D minor" and Joseph DePasquale in a beautiful viola solo in Berlioz "Harold in Italy". Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" with the urgency and poetry of his music with members of the orchestra as eager to show their enthusiasm as were members of the audience.

The final week of the Tanglewood Festival begins with a Gala Night on Thursday. Pierre Monteux will conduct Friday night with music of Weber, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms. Dr. Munch will conduct Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel on Saturday evening's program. Sunday afternoon it will be Copeland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" with Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, and the Festival Chorus in what will be an historical performance. The concert will mark Dr. Munch's final appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as he goes into a retirement whose schedule already would be enough for any three conductors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

Music: Ormandy Returns To Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy made a triumphant return to the Tanglewood podium last night, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend.

The highly enthused audience numbered 8,224.

Eugene Istomin was soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, opus 23, which he will play at the Worcester Music Festival in October.

Orchestral works were Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, opus 25, and Symphony No. 6 in E flat minor, opus 111.

Wide Contrasts

No two symphonies by one composer reveal wider character contrasts than these two by Prokofieff. Ormandy made this clear with the cooperation of an orchestra that apparently was in total agreement with his visions. Furthermore, we have never heard this great orchestra play more brilliantly.

Conductor and orchestra turned the "Classical" into a revelation of disarming brightness, and this is by no means to be attributed in bulk to the nature of the work.

There certainly was no harangue in the "Classical." The first and final movements were taken a little too fast for complete articulation. Yet, phrases were finely chiseled — specific in point and purpose. The real tongue in cheek mockery appeared most effectively in the slow movement and gavotte. Ormandy conducted them as if he were instructing a graduate class in form and orchestral witticism. It was a beautiful satire on "powdered-wig" music.

The Sixth Symphony went from the brilliant comic strip to grand oration. Powerful undercurrents of agitation alternated between temperance and flaying severity. It ranged from the most genteel of sounds in the slow movement to sounds of Herculean strength in sounds of Herculean strenght in the finale.

No Lagging

Despite its uncommon length there was no lagging in the slow movement. At every point, Ormandy drew from the orchestra sounds of marvelous intrigue. Intricate harmonies and instrumental devices were not permitted to interfere with its song-like, however murky, character.

The finale was turned into a huzzah of sound splashes and aggressive rhythms. Strings, wood winds, bassoon and tuba each contributed inmeasurably to the dazzling results.

Applause rivalled the symphony's clangorous volume.

Grand Manner

Istomin played the Tchaikovsky Concerto in the grand manner. It was a tasteful performance at the same time. He bypassed no opportunity to make melodies sing to high heaven. The opening chords crashed properly but were not dealt with iron fists. Also, there were some wrong notes to mar the technical picture.

Nevertheless, storms of octaves and runs displayed admirable dexterity. But, above all, it was a musicianly performance and not a newly paved speedway for the old war horse.

This afternoon's program had a lively open rehearsal yesterday morning, attended by 3,765 who each paid $1.50 to benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Brahms Concerto

Charles Munch, orchestra and soloist Gary Graffman rehearsed Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Opus 15. The one stop in performance was for mechanical reason.

An F string broke in the piano's high register. The viola section took quite an interest in what had happened. Graffman went on, and at the end of the movement took time out to remove the broken string while Munch looked on. Concertmaster Alfred Krips rushed backstage to summon help and four stalwart gentlemen came out to view what appeared to be a disaster. They finally retired, having accomplished absolutely nothing, and the rehearsal went on.

Krips returned eventually, looking as if he'd been on a tragi mission, and picked up his part in mid-phrase.

Throughout the episode Graffman demonstrated admirable poise compared with the second-rate pianist who threatened not to play his recent Tanglewood engagement because the instrument hadn't been "voiced" to his satisfaction. Also on the rehearsal agenda was Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," four songs for soprano and orchestra. Adele Addison was the soloist and will sing at this afternoon's performance. Foss will conduct. There was no mistaking the audience's positive reaction, or the Boston Symphony players' pungent comments at rehearsal intermission.

Also scheduled for this afternoon's concert is Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major.

Families G
Plan Ahead
If Your Family
Has Outgrown Yo Present Home
ADD EXTR
SMAL
The Oaks Inn
FREE — SUNDA
plete Turkey din under 8.
S2

STAMFORD, Conn.
Circ. 26,432
AUG 20 1962
Advocate

Music Festival At Tanglewood Nears End

There is nothing like a quick trip to Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., to make you live outside your normal time and savour the day — the hour — the minute — and the musical moments of the Berkshire Music Festival.

This past weekend drew particular attention to time as Lucas Foss conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Adele Addison in a work especially commissioned for her, Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle." The four songs about time included the lines by Auden: "We have no time until/ We know what time we fill . . ." In this memorable performance, even the precise movements of Mr. Foss were provocative of wonder about time. His almost mathematical conducting was certainly a contrast to the batonwork of Charles Munch and Eugene Ormandy, the major conductors during the weekend, and of Leon Kirchner, whose impressive Sinfonia opened the Friday concert in the shed.

One of the wonderful things about being at Tanglewood is that you hear a variety of music and see a number of outstanding artists in a short time. Mr. Ormandy's interpretation of Porkofiev's Sixth Symphony was a strong center of Saturday evening's concert. Eugene Istomin played "the" Tchaikovsky piano concerto; Gary Graffman, the first one by Brahms. The violist Joseph De Pasquale was soloist in "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz.

The weekend of variety was given an unusual cohesion by the composer's informal talks and the open rehearsals which allow several introductions to the same works.

This is the final week of the Berkshire Festival. A gala evening Thursday begins at 4 p.m. with a chamber concert, followed at 5 o'clock by a concert of music by young composers at Tanglewood. A fanfare at 6:45 announces the Tanglewood Choir, and the climaxing performance will be Mahler's Third Symphony, conducted by Richard Burgin and with Florence Kopleff, contralto.

Friday evening, Pierre Monteux will conduct; on Saturday and Sunday, Mr. Munch. The festival ends Sunday afternoon with its traditional performance of Beethoven's Ninth.

a scintillating performance of the "Classical Symphony" by Prokofiev, a work which Koussevitsky made famous years ago on these same grounds.

Enchanted Audience

Like the Koussevitzky reading, this symphony left the ground at its first chord, and never touched it again. That is the way it should be.

The master melodist drew from his vast supplies melodies gay, insouciant, brittle, and at times sardonic. The performance mounted up to one of the finest we have ever encountered, and we do not expect to hear its equal again for a long time. The audience was enchanted.

Turning from the fanciful Prokofiev, Ormandy chose to play the solid, masterful Symphony No. 6 in E-flat minor. This is music which needs more than one hearing, but Ormandy made its points so clear and so authoritative that this first hearing was an unadulterated pleasure.

Enlarged Folk Tunes

This is a nervous work which grows with intensity. It is almost as noisy as Kirchner's symphony, but in a much more pleasant way. He draws heavily on folk tunes of Russian origin, and enlarges them with the rare genius of a poet.

Ormandy, conducting without a score, was on the alert for every nuance, every tempo change, and in fact, he fairly drove the symphony along deep, deep into the listener's conscience.

The result was sheer bedlam. The audience went almost mad with delight and was still applauding as we left the shed. Of course the music had something to do with it.

Eugene Istomin is one of those rare modest geniuses who have something to offer and do it without pretense or bravado. From the crashing chords of the opening movement to the delicate tracery of the second movement, to the pyrotechnics of the finale, Istomin had everything under control.

Introspective Reading

The work was given a more introspective reading than one sometime hears, not as large-scale as some performances we have heard.

Istomin made his points through meticulous attention to detail. The result was that one heard beauties often missed in large-scale performances. The beauty of this work does not depend upon the virility of the utterance as much as it does upon the poetic approach to many of its passages.

This was the third time that I have heard Istomin play this work. Each time I have marvelled at his grasp and intellectual approach to it.

Magnificent Collaboration

There may have been some in the audience who had expected a "Horowitzian" performance, which this was not, but it served its purpose and the music admirably. It must have, because I have not heard such an enthusiastic response for a long time.

Ormandy and the Boston Symphony players provided magnificent collaboration, collaboration so honest and well met, that this concert turned out to be one of the finest of the series so far.

Adele Addison

Adele Addison sings today Lukas Foss' "Tife Cycle," a work commissioned for her by the Ford Foundation Humanities and Arts Program.

This is the first time it has been performed at Tanglewood with full orchestra. A chamber setting was used last season.

Miss Addison should draw a record crowd, for I think she has sung at the Berkshire Festival more often than any other soprano, and always has endeared herself to the Tanglewood audiences.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
AUG 21 1962

Two Pianists Sparkle At Tanglewood

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS.—The two talented young pianists, Eugene Istomin and Gary Graffman, gave Tanglewood audiences of more than 20,000 over the weekend two concerts of piano music they will long remember. With Dr. Charles Munch conducting Friday night and yesterday afternoon and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra as Saturday night's guest conductor, audiences had a rich variety of music ranging from Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky through Schubert, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Berlioz. In addition Leon Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" Friday evening and Sunday afternoon's audience heard Adele Addison sing Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" with the composer conducting. What started out as a week-end of heavy rain on Friday braved by 4,294 hardy musical souls ended with a beautiful Sunday afternoon of music listened to by 7,827.

Gary Graffman had Sunday afternoon's audience as thunderous in its applause as he had been in his forceful, powerful playing of Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor." His playing was slow and deliberate when needed, delicate and lyrical upon demand, sparkling toward the end, but for the most part, and this through long solo passages, possessed of a forthrightness and vigor that left no doubt of his talent. The audience left no doubt of the warmth of its appreciation. Adele Addison, singing the "Time Cycle" of four songs for soprano and orchestra, earlier in the afternoon had received the warm applause of the audience. To this writer it seemed a partial waste of such fine voice and musical talent that both should have been spent on Lukas Foss' deeply serious but highly doubtful composition. Based on the writings of four deeply significant authors, Auden, Houseman, Kafka, and Nietszche, the music produces strangely weird and almost mad sounds putting the soprano through torture and leaving much to be desired. The delightful "Symphony No. 5" of Schubert with which the Sunday concert began was so much more appealing and appropriate for the sunny, sleepy afternoon.

Eugene Istomin's performance Saturday night before 8,224 was a scintillating, lyrical version of Tchaikovsky's "Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B-flat minor." The audience left no doubt about its enthusiastic reception of his vigorous, talented efforts. The applause was terrific and entirely deserved. The Boston had played with high success throughout the evening rising to every demand of Ormandy who drew wonderful moving effects from the strings in Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" and from the same composer's "Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor," a less-well known composition with many strange effects. Heard for the first time at Tanglewood it needs re-hearing and closer scrutiny but its performance was highly successful.

The brave souls who came out in Friday's teeming rain heard Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5, in D minor" and Joseph DePasquale in a beautiful viola solo in Berlioz "Harold in Italy". Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" with the urgency and poetry of his music with members of the orchestra as eager to show their enthusiasm as were members of the audience.

The final week of the Tanglewood Festival begins with a Gala Night on Thursday. Pierre Monteux will conduct Friday night with music of Weber, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms. Dr. Munch will conduct Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel on Saturday evening's program. Sunday afternoon it will be Copeland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" with Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, and the Festival Chorus in what will be an historical performance. The concert will mark Dr. Munch's final appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as he goes into a retirement whose schedule already would be enough for any three conductors.

120

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 20 1962

Music Review

Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE TWO concerts yesterday afternoon and Saturday evening at Tanglewood leave but one week of the Berkshire Festival season. Charles Munch directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, and Eugene Ormandy completed the second of his two guest appearances Saturday.

Both programs ended with one of the big piano concertos with Gary Graffman playing the First Brahms yesterday and Eugene Istomin the Tchaikowsky Saturday. The first half of both programs contained substantial material of great contrasts. Yesterday, Munch led the orchestra in the Schubert 5th, in B flat major, a product of the composer's 19th year and full of light gaiety. The Lukas Foss Time Cycle which followed and which was conducted by the composer has the weight of the world on its shoulders.

Ormandy balanced his program in much the same formula, beginning with the first symphony of Prokofiev, his "Classical;" a witty, playful concoction at every point, and following with the same composer's symphony of 30 years later, his sixth, and as serious as its predecessor had been light.

* * *

THE FOSS Cycle was pure fascination. He has played it before but in a conception for a smaller group. He has inserted at other performances, between the sections, a quartet of improvisors. Yesterday was its first rendition at Tanglewood for orchestra with soprano soloist. The vocalist was Adele Addison for whom it was commissioned by the Ford Foundation Humanities and Arts Program. Miss Addition made it an emotional experience. Her opulent voice was but the smaller factor in the success of the work.

Lukas Foss

It was her vivid portrayal of the poems Foss selected as the basis of his composition that took it from the shelf of curiosities and put it in the forefront of current musical thought.

Foss has chosen a verse relating to time from each of four poets. They all are poems of rejection, of discontent and futility, and Foss has expressed in music what they mean to him. Auden declares "clocks cannot tell our time of day"; Housman "on my tongue the taste is sour"; Kafka "this week was a total breakdown"; Nietzsche "ecstasy deeper than heartache." The performance was enormously more coordinated than when heard here last, and approached validity much more than when it was a complete novelty.

Foss gives the voice jumps, which, if written in a linear progression, must look like a cardiograph of a person in shock or a market chart of last May 28. But that Miss Addison sang it with a sense of its import and so conveyed it to the very large audience was a triumph equally divided between her and Foss. The sounds are not intended to be pretty or sweet. There is a mathematical element in them and they reappear in inversion and cancrizans, and direction becomes discernible through the maze and labyrinth of the writing.

* * *

GRAFFMAN'S impression on the audience deepened as he progressed into his concerto. There were no problems for him in the formidable solo Brahms wrote, but the first movement was not consistently distinguished. It was in the adagio that his artistry rose to superior levels and in the final allegro that he struck a tempo and a rhythm that displayed an unsurpassed discipline. The second theme in B flat was played with a melting legato which provided a dramatic contrast to the vigor of the initial statement.

Munch began his program with the charming little Schubert symphony, a counterpart in euphoria and enchantment to the work in the analagous spot Ormandy chose for his program the night before. The "Classical" symphony was from Prokofiev's 25th year. There was a span of 30 years before he arrived at the "sixth" with which Ormandy followed it Saturday. We find the early work unfailingly delightful. We glean that the composer is toying with the materials his mastery puts at his finger tips. He uses an orchestra slightly larger than Schubert asked for in his fifth, but it is a completely transparent work, brief and terse, witty and gay.

* * *

THE SIXTH of Prokofiev is a very busy piece of orchestration, employing a very large battery in every choir, with piano and harp, but Ormandy delineated it into remarkable symmetry with ease and authority. It is in the unusual key of the minor mode of six flats, and its playing requires four times the span the "classical" consumes. During his lifetime Prokofiev and his surviving colleague, Shostakovich, for all their chastisement by the cultural committee of their government, never challenged our ears with experiments like those we have heard in the last fortnight from the pens of Fine and Foss, to name but two. The Russians explored orchestration and combinations of tonal textures, but never ventured far into the terra incognita a large number of our composers today feel offer potential rewards.

The Tchaikowsky piano concerto is such a familiar work these days that its enthusiastic reception is assured by audiences without regard to the competence of the soloist. We hope Istomin will not take it amiss if we state that we think, therefor, that he would have received an equal ovation if he had played less well. No other concerto exposes a soloist more favorably. There are no long introductions as Brahms writes for his two piano concertos, or as Berlioz wrote in "Harold." The piano has the limelight, and such a glowing one, 99 per cent of the time, and Ormandy's accompaniment was a tremendous support and enhancement of Istomin's virtuosity.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 20 1962

Miss Addison Is Cheered In Festival Performance

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The finest day, weather-wise, of the current Berkshire Music Festival here at Tanglewood drew an audience of 7827 to the great shed where Charles Munch directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program which ranged from Lukas Foss to Johannes Brahms, and enlisted services of soprano, Adele Addison. This proved a combination difficult to beat.

Demands Skill

Miss Addison sang Lukas Foss's "Time Cycle," commissioned for Miss Addison by the Ford Foundation humanities and arts program. It is not particularly pleasant music to the ear, but it demands tremendous technical skill and musicianship, and Miss Addison is highly endowed with both.

Even after reading the four poems, I was not quite sure what it was all about, I think the audience shared my puzzlement, for everytime there came a pause, there was a smattering of applause and no one seemed to know when it was all over. Miss Addison sang with her accustomed skill, beautiful tone and rare sense of perspective. Mr. Foss conducted his work, so it probably was definitive.

Anyway it aroused puzzlement and, I think, considerable interest, particularly among the singers in the audience, not one of which I dare to believe could have matched Miss Addison's performance, vocally or musically. Her gracious charm and lovely appearance quite won the audience before she even sang a note. Applause was long and loud and well deserved.

Symphony Lavish

To get back to more serious things, Mr. Munch opened the program with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. He lavished tremendous care on every detail, and the result was a smooth, flowing, highly articulate performance. The symphony is smooth-flowing, and as it meanders its way, it dispenses tune after tune, each one lovlier than the one before. Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony players gave it every opportunity to shine and it shone brilliantly.

Audience response was more than gracious, verging upon the hysterical.

The final number of the program brought Gary Graffman to the stage to play the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor. This is a concerto which can stand man-sized handling, and it got it. Graffman's brilliant technique, his fine musicianship, and his feeling for line and melody combined to produce a performance worthy of the music. In these days of fabulous technique, this was music which called for every ounce of energy the pianist had.

Great Clarity

The cooperation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Munch was well-nigh perfect. I have heard this concerto played on a larger scale, but seldom have I heard it played with greater clarity. The audience was moved to more than generous applause; in fact I can hear it now.

This week end's total attendance was 25,464, as compared with last year's 24,962.

The Kroll Quartet will play at the Wednesday evening chamber music concert in the Tanglewood theater. This quartet is one of the most admired that appears here during the season, and also one of the most experienced. Weather permitting, it will draw a most discriminating and musical audience. The program will include works by Beethoven and Bartok.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 20 1962

Munch Conducts Sunday Concert

By DON O. NOEL JR.

Lenox, Mass. — Pianist Gary Graffman was guest soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon in a stirring performance of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor at the Tanglewood Music Shed.

It was the second guest performance of the afternoon. Earlier, Soprano Adele Addison joined forces with Composer Lukas Foss for a performance of his 1960 "Time Cycle," commissioned by Miss Addison through a Ford Foundation grant.

* * *

IT WAS THE BRAHMS, however, which was the obvious hit of the afternoon. Mr. Graffman is capable of real virtuoso thunder and lightning without becoming unpleasantly percussive, and his final, allegro movement was fine indeed.

One felt that Mr. Munch allowed the orchestra to override the piano a bit in parts of the opening maestoso movement. The slow adagio was done feelingly and with great expression.

Miss Addison's contribution was no less well done, but the medium was substantially less familiar Mr. Foss is one of the country's outstanding modern composers, one of the many today who have all but abandoned rhythmic harmony.

His "Time Cycle" is built around four rather obscure, symbolic poems, sung or spoken by the soprano voice in a demanding but striking series of tone jumps.

Her accompaniment, however, was aimed at illustration of one line from one of the texts, by Kafka: "The clocks do not synchronize; the inner one chases in a devilish, or demoniac, or at any rate inhuman manner; the outer one goes haltingly at its usual pace."

An orchestral expression of those lines can perhaps be imagined; it takes some getting used to.

* * *

MR. MUNCH yielded the podium to the composer for his own work, and Mr. Foss maintained a rigid, metronomic beat which only emphasized the syncopation of his music.

Mr. Munch opened the afternoon's concert with a performance of Shubert's Symphony No. 5 in B-Flat. It was rather a French, romantic reading of an essentially German score, but enjoyable nonetheless.

Conn
L Bury American
8/20/62

Tanglewood Concerts Scintillating

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS.—The two talented young pianists, Eugene Istomin and Gary Graffman gave Tanglewood audiences o more than 20,000 over the week end two concerts of piano mu sic they will long remember. With Dr. Charles Munch conducting Friday night and yesterday afternoon and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra as Saturday night's guest conductor, audiences had a rich variety of music ranging from Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky through Schubert, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Berlioz. In addition Leon Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" Friday evening and Sunday afternoon's audience heard Adele Addison sing Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" with the composer conducting. What started out as a week-end of heavy rain on Friday braved by 4,294 hardy musical souls ended with a beautiful Sunday afternoon of music listened to by 7,827.

Gary Graffman had Sunday afternoon's audience as thunderous in its applause as he had been in his forceful, powerful playing of Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor." His playing was slow and deliberate when needed, delicate and lyrical upon demand, sparkling toward the end, but for the most part, and this through long solo passages, possessed of a forthrightness and vigor that left no doubt of his talent. The audience left no doubt of the warmth of its appreciation. Adele Addison, singing the "Time Cycle" of four songs for soprano and orchestra, earlier in the afternoon had received the warm applause of the audience. To this writer it seemed a partial waste of such fine voice and musical talent that both should have been spent on Lukas Foss' deeply serious but highly doubtful composition. Based on the writings of four deeply significant authors, Auden, Houseman, Kafka, and Nietszche, the music produces strangely weird and almost mad sounds putting the soprano through torture and leaving much to be desired. The delightful "Symphony No. 5" of Schubert with which the Sunday concert began was so much more appealing and appropriate for the sunny, sleepy afternoon.

Eugene Istomin's performance Saturday night before 8,224 was a scintillating, lyrical version of Tchaikovsky's "Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B-flat minor." The audience left no doubt about its enthusiastic reception of his vigorous, talented efforts. The applause was terrific and entirely deserved. The Boston had played with high success throughout the evening rising to every demand of Ormandy who drew wonderful moving effects from the strings in Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" and from the same composer's "Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor," a less-well known composition with many strange effects. Heard for the first time at Tanglewood it needs rehearing and closer scrutiny but its performance was highly successful.

The brave souls who came out in Friday's teeming rain heard Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5, in D minor" and Joseph DePasquale in a beautiful viola solo in Berlioz "Harold in Italy". Kirchner conducted his own "Sinfonia" with the urgency and poetry of his music with members of the orchestra as eager to show their enthusiasm as were members of the audience.

The final week of the Tanglewood Festival begins with a Gala Night on Thursday. Pierre Monteux will conduct Friday night with music of Weber, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms. Dr. Munch will conduct Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel on Saturday's evening's program. Sunday afternoon it will be Copeland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" with Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, and the Festival Chorus in what will be an historical performance. The concert will mark Dr. Munch's final appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as he goes into a retirement whose schedule already would be enough for any three conductors.

S M

Telegram
WORCESTER
Circ. 57,7
AUG 20

Musi

By RAYMON
Telegram Mu

LENOX — The Festival closed its end yesterday af combination progr repertory and a periment.

An audience o the weekend tota
the Boston Symp
tor Charles Mun acclaim for their Schubert's Symp
B Flat Major.

Gary Graffma
Brahms' piano in D Minor, Opus successful. Soprano acquitted herself tinction for her Lukas Foss' "Tim ducted by the co

Wholesome

Schubert's Fifth presented strictly its wholesome s quired an orche Symphony stand sounds of such un as heard in the
We doubt if an Schubert's day co accurately and b nized at the op
Munch for the op movements. The gree of rhythmic the latter.

"Time Cycle"
York Music Cri
1961. It was com
Ford Foundation
son. The work been performed Symphony and N monic.

Yesterday it wa completely segr
This work does
ferent reaction.
the audience ga or performers a Foss and Miss A curtain calls.

Reasonab

Those who dis reasonable reas is based on Housman, Kafk
The first two a the last two in

Foss has tured the sp ticularly Au statements. I question satisf

Miss Addison for valor on a — vocal delive entious partic
ly paradoxical

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 20 1962

Music: Berkshire Music Festival

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Festival closed its seventh weekend yesterday afternoon with a symphonic program of standard repertory and a present day experiment.

An audience of 7,827, bringing the weekend total to 25,464, gave the Boston Symphony and conductor Charles Munch enthusiastic acclaim for their performance of Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major.

Gary Graffman's playing of Brahms' piano concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Opus 15, was highly successful. Soprano Adele Addison acquitted herself with rare distinction for her solo talents in Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," conducted by the composer.

Wholesome Simplicity

Schubert's Fifth Symphony was presented strictly in the light of its wholesome simplicity. It requires an orchestra of Boston Symphony standard to make sounds of such untarnished purity as heard in the first movement. We doubt if any orchestra of Schubert's day could have played accurately and been so synchronized at the speeds selected by Munch for the opening and closing movements. The result was a degree of rhythmic unsteadiness in the latter.

"Time Cycle" received the New York Music Critics' Award for 1961. It was commissioned by the Ford Foundation for Miss Addison. The work had previously been performed by the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic.

Yesterday it was heard by two completely segregated factions. This work does not permit indifferent reaction. One segment of the audience gave the work and or performers a fine reception. Foss and Miss Addison took three curtain calls.

Reasonable Reasons

Those who disliked the work had reasonable reasons. "Time Cycle is based on poems by Auden, Housman, Kafka and Nietzsche. The first two are sung in English, the last two in German.

Foss has unquestionably captured the spirit of the texts, particularly Auden's paradoxical statements, like "Nor does the question satisfy the answer."

Miss Addison deserves a medal for valor on at least two counts — vocal delivery and her conscientious participation in an equally paradoxical score. Some of the words could not be understood because they were involved with awkward, widely separated, breath-exhausting intervals. These conflicted in pitch with instrumental accompaniment.

In other instances, the instruments all but drowned out the voice, especially percussion.

Opposing Party

Members of the opposing party were those who (perhaps naively) seek discernible and ingratiating melody, harmony, rhythm and tonal color in their music.

Rhythm is abundant in this score. Some of it is clever, some jarring or involved to a point of listening fatigue. Consonant harmony is sparingly used. Tonal mixtures range from a few short-lived moments of standard beauty to violent, blatant, cacophonous, grating, repelling sound. It takes talent to make an orchestra sound like this, because there is a difference between dissonance and noise.

What does it all mean?

Source of Idea

Foss states that he got the time song-cycle idea from the following statement; "The clocks do not synchronize: the inner one chases in an inhuman manner, the outer one goes haltingly at its usual pace."

Next Thursday is the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening," consisting of programs prepared by the schools various departments.

Pierre Monteux conducts the Boston Symphony on Friday night in the opening concert of the festival's final weekend. The program: Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Hindemith's "Matthis der Maler," and Brahms' First Symphony.

MUSIC MAGAZINE
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 10,000
AUG 1962

121

BOSTON: BSO Concertmaster Retires

The man who leaves the concertmaster's desk of the Boston Symphony at the end of the Tanglewood season had hardly left it for a single concert in 42 years. Richard Burgin, as long on talent as he is on health and vigor, first assumed the post in 1920, at the request of a dapper, slenderer Pierre Monteux. He will continue, however, as the associate conductor of the orchestra, the post Koussevitzky first conferred on him in 1943.

His musical perspective is rooted in the Romantic and Classical past, to be sure. Having made a 1903 debut as violinist with the Warsaw Philharmonic, he studied with Joachim in Berlin and Auer in St. Petersburg. He held two posts as concertmaster, in Helsinki, then in Oslo, up to the time of his appointment at Boston.

Like other first-deskmen of the Boston Symphony, he has often stepped forward as soloist, 77 times since 1920, performing all the standard concerti and lesser-known ones by Hindemith, Prokofiev, Lopatnikoff, and Jaubert.

He first took those two extra steps to the podium in 1924, when Koussevitzky was indisposed, to steer a concert that included Honegger's Pacific 231, that panegyric to a locomotive that was muddying much musical penmanship in those days. Among the world premieres he has led since then are Toch's Big Ben, Harris' Second Symphony, Menotti's Piano Concerto, Cowell's Short Symphony, Blackwood's First Symphony, and Moev's Attia. The list rivals that of his U.S. premieres: Malipiero, Poot, Krenek, and Foss, among many others. But the compositions he has introduced to Boston include all vintages and styles: Mahler, Miaskovsky, Shostakovich, Vaughan Williams, as well as Revueltas, Berezowsky, Bartók, and Hindemith.

—ROBERT DUMM

ered in Binghamton, New York . . . Richard

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
AUG 20 1962
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 20 1962

Whitestone Photo

Charles Munch, who retires Aug. 26 after 13 years as musical director of the Boston Symphony, presents retirement gifts to two of his colleagues at a recent Tanglewood luncheon. Jacobus Langendoen (left) has been a member of the orchestra's cello section for 42 years, and Richard Burgin (right) has been concertmaster for the same amount of time. Dr. Munch will conclude the Tanglewood season this Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

Dr. Charles Munch To Receive Award From Conference

LENOX—Today officials of the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, will present a silver tray to Charles Munch honoring his retirement Aug. 26 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The tray bears the following message:

Presented to Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, August 18, 1962, in appreciation of your contribution to the cultural, social and economic welfare of Berkshire County. Presented by the Berkshire Hills Conference

The presentation ceremony will take place immediately following today's open rehearsal. The Berkshire Hills Conference will be represented by E. J. Brundage, retiring president of the conference; Lawrence K. Miller, editor of the Berkshire Eagle; Peter Guille, director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, and John V. Geary, executive secretary of the conference. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 20 1962

Music: Berkshire Music Festival

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Festival closed its seventh weekend yesterday afternoon with a combination program of standard repertory and a present day experiment.

An audience of 7,827, bringing the weekend total to 25,464, gave the Boston Symphony and conductor Charles Munch enthusiastic acclaim for their performance of Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major.

Gary Graffman's playing of Brahms' piano concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Opus 15, was highly successful. Soprano Adele Addison acquitted herself with rare distinction for her solo talents in Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," conducted by the composer.

Wholesome Simplicity

Schubert's Fifth Symphony was presented strictly in the light of its wholesome simplicity. It requires an orchestra of Boston Symphony standard to make sounds of such untarnished purity as heard in the first movement. We doubt if any orchestra of Schubert's day could have played accurately and been so synchronized at the speeds selected by Munch for the opening and closing movements. The result was a degree of rhythmic unsteadiness in the latter.

"Time Cycle" received the New York Music Critics' Award for 1961. It was commissioned by the Ford Foundation for Miss Addison. The work had previously been performed by the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic.

Yesterday it was heard by two completely segregated factions. This work does not permit indifferent reaction. One segment of the audience gave the work and or performers a fine reception. Foss and Miss Addison took three curtain calls.

Reasonable Reasons

Those who disliked the work had reasonable reasons. "Time Cycle is based on poems by Auden, Housman, Kafka and Nietzsche. The first two are sung in English, the last two in German.

Foss has unquestionably captured the spirit of the texts, particularly Auden's paradoxical statements, like "Nor does the question satisfy the answer."

Miss Addison deserves a medal for valor on at least two counts — vocal delivery and her conscientious participation in an equally paradoxical score. Some of the words could not be understood because they were involved with awkward, widely separated, breath-exhausting intervals. These conflicted in pitch with instrumental accompaniment.

In other instances, the instruments all but drowned out the voice, especially percussion.

Opposing Party

Members of the opposing party were those who (perhaps naively) seek discernible and ingratiating melody, harmony, rhythm and tonal color in their music.

Rhythm is abundant in this score. Some of it is clever, some jarring or involved to a point of listening fatigue. Consonant harmony is sparingly used. Tonal mixtures range from a few short-lived moments of standard beauty to violent, blatant, cacophonous, grating, repelling sound. It takes talent to make an orchestra sound like this, because there is a difference between dissonance and noise.

What does it all mean?

Source of Idea

Foss states that he got the time song-cycle idea from the following statement; "The clocks do not synchronize: the inner one chases in an inhuman manner, the outer one goes haltingly at its usual pace."

Next Thursday is the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening," consisting of programs prepared by the schools various departments.

Pierre Monteux conducts the Boston Symphony on Friday night in the opening concert of the festival's final weekend. The program: Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Hindemith's "Matthis der Maler," and Brahms' First Symphony.

MUSIC MAGAZINE
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 10,000
AUG 1962

121

BOSTON: BSO Concertmaster Retires

The man who leaves the concertmaster's desk of the Boston Symphony at the end of the Tanglewood season had hardly left it for a single concert in 42 years. Richard Burgin, as long on talent as he is on health and vigor, first assumed the post in 1920, at the request of a dapper, slenderer Pierre Monteux. He will continue, however, as the associate conductor of the orchestra, the post Koussevitzky first conferred on him in 1943.

His musical perspective is rooted in the Romantic and Classical past, to be sure. Having made a 1903 debut as violinist with the Warsaw Philharmonic, he studied with Joachim in Berlin and Auer in St. Petersburg. He held two posts as concertmaster, in Helsinki, then in Oslo, up to the time of his appointment at Boston.

Like other first-deskmen of the Boston Symphony, he has often stepped forward as soloist, 77 times since 1920, performing all the standard concerti and lesser-known ones by Hindemith, Prokofiev, Lopatnikoff, and Jaubert.

He first took those two extra steps to the podium in 1924, when Koussevitzky was indisposed, to steer a concert that included Honegger's Pacific 231, that panegyric to a locomotive that was muddying much musical penmanship in those days. Among the world premieres he has led since then are Toch's Big Ben, Harris' Second Symphony, Menotti's Piano Concerto, Cowell's Short Symphony, Blackwood's First Symphony, and Moev's Attia. The list rivals that of his U.S. premieres: Malipiero, Poot, Krenek, and Foss, among many others. But the compositions he has introduced to Boston include all vintages and styles: Mahler, Miaskovsky, Shostakovich, Vaughan Williams, as well as Revueltas, Berezowsky, Bartók, and Hindemith.

—ROBERT DUMM

ered in Binghamton, New York . . . Richard

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
AUG 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 20 1962

Whitestone Photo

Charles Munch, who retires Aug. 26 after 13 years as musical director of the Boston Symphony, presents retirement gifts to two of his colleagues at a recent Tanglewood luncheon. Jacobus Langendoen (left) has been a member of the orchestra's cello section for 42 years, and Richard Burgin (right) has been concertmaster for the same amount of time. Dr. Munch will conclude the Tanglewood season this Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

Dr. Charles Munch To Receive Award From Conference

LENOX—Today officials of the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, will present a silver tray to Charles Munch honoring his retirement Aug. 26 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The tray bears the following message:

Presented to Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, August 18, 1962, in appreciation of your contribution to the cultural, social and economic welfare of Berkshire County. Presented by the Berkshire Hills Conference.

The presentation ceremony will take place immediately following today's open rehearsal. The Berkshire Hills Conference will be represented by E. J. Brundage, retiring president of the conference; Lawrence R. Miller, editor of the Berkshire Eagle; Peter Guille, director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, and John V. Geary, executive secretary of the conference. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

122 8TH. WEEK. AUG 20TH. AUG. 26TH.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 18 1962

Conference To Honor Dr. Munch

The Berkshire Hills Conference this morning, following the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, will honor Dr. Charles Munch on his retirement a week from Sunday as musical director of the orchestra after 13 years' service.

At an informal ceremony, Dr. Munch will receive a silver tray from the Conference bearing this inscription:

Presented to Dr. Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 18, 1962, in appreciation of your contribution to the cultural, social and economic welfare of Berkshire County.

Presented by the Berkshire Hills Conference.

Th Berkshire Hills Conference will be represented by Ernest J. Brundage, past president of the Conference; Lawrence K. Miller, editor of The Eagle; Peter Guille, director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown and John V. Geary, executive director of the Conference.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will represent the BCO.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

AUG 25 1962

Tanglewood

The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Doctor Charles Munch from his post after thirteen years as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Doctor Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's (August 24) Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" (Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday (August 25) there will be Open Rehearsal at 10:00 A.M. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8:00 P.M. Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique", Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe", Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert Sunday (August 26) as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Doctor Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is Music Director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION
D. 83,057

AUG 18 1962

Dr. Charles Munch To Receive Award From Conference

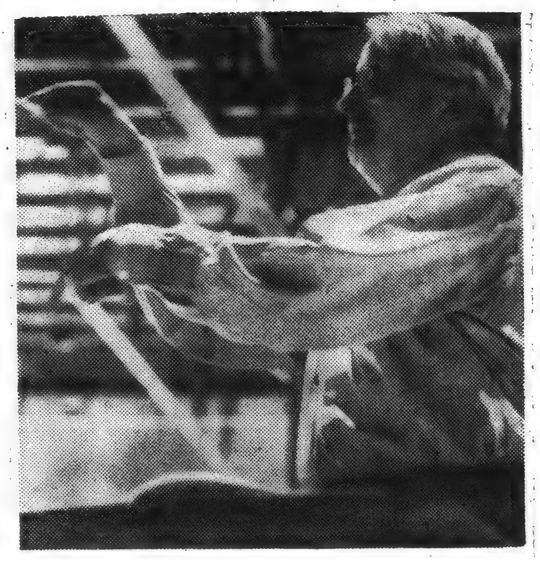
LENOX—Today officials of the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, will present a silver tray to Charles Munch honoring his retirement Aug. 26 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The tray bears the following message:

Presented to Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, August 18, 1962, in appreciation of your contribution to the cultural, social and economic welfare of Berkshire County. Presented by the Berkshire Hills Conference

The presentation ceremony will take place immediately following today's open rehearsal. The Berkshire Hills Conference will be represented by E. J. Brundage, retiring president of the conference; Lawrence K. Miller, editor of the Berkshire Eagle; Peter Guille, director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, and John V. Geary, executive secretary of the conference. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

AUG 19 1962



Charles Munch rehearsing the orchestra in the music shed at the Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass., where he will make his last appearances as music director of the Boston Symphony Saturday and Sunday.

ATHENS HERALD
Thursday, August 23, 1962

A scene at Tanglewood in Lenox, where the 25th season of the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is nearing its close.

NEWARK, N.J.
NEWS
D. 270,538 S 384,224

AUG 19 1962

GOOD MUSIC AHEAD—Charles Munch conducts a program of Handel and Brahms when a 13-week series of Boston Symphony Orchestra premieres on Channel 5 at 8 tonight.

Munch Is Leaving Boston Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the Orchestra's 81st season and the 25th Berkshire Festival next Sunday with performances of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven at 2:30 p.m.

Sunday's concert will be Dr. Munch's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for 13 years. During his tenure with the orchestra, Dr. Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres.

In his 13 years as music director, Charles Munch brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the Orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix de Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

CHARLES MUNCH extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present season of eight weeks, bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts to 24. These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts, in addition to Arthur Fiedler's 59 Pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50-week season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, trustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Dr. Munch as the orchestra's music director in September, have invited Dr. Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence. In addition to his concerts with this orchestra, Dr. Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

In the autumn of 1962 Charles Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. Doctor Munch has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals. He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG. 19 1962

Dr. Munch Three Co

Famous Conductor Addison Solo

LENOX—Dr. Charl
Tanglewood this week the final portion of its season will take place ne
Dr. Munch conducts his cert. Dr. Munch, ordered because of the youthful retire after 13 years of the internationally fa chestra.

Adele Addison
Dr. Munch will afternoon's concert in the Shed at 2.30, next Saturd ning at 8 and his final ance next Sunday
For his concert this a Dr. Munch has invite field soprano Adele Ad join Lukas Foss, as so in Foss' Time Cycle. D will direct the Boston S Orchestra in Schubert phony No. 5 and be Gary Graffman as in a performance of Piano Concerto No. 1.
Dr. Munch has inv friend Pierre Monteux duct Friday's Berkshi val program. Mr. M be making his four ance at Tanglewood this at Friday's concert.
gram will include
"Euryanthe", Overtur mith's Symphony " Maler" ("Matthias er"), and the Symp
In C Minor, Op. 68.
On Saturday there open rehearsal at 10
the benefit of the phony Orchestra
That evening at 8 will begin the Berkshi program with the fantastique," Op. 14
Also to be heard
Mer" (The Sea), and Ravel's "Daphn
Ballet, Suite No. 2.

Final Progra
For his final conc day as music dire
Boston Symphony O
the concluding pro
1962 Berkshire
Munch has chose work Beethoven's S 9, in D Minor, with on Schiller's Ode to Adele Addison, so ence Kopleff, cont
McCollum, tenor;
Gramm, baritone
loists. The Festival been prepared by Patterson. At
Charles Munch
Chorus will be au
Choeur des Etud versite de Mont
Graton, a former Berkshire Music sic director of this also appeared at T
the final concert of Berkshire Festival
Next Sunday's begin with a Aaron Copland's
Strings, Trumpet
Horn, Roger Voisi pet of the Boston Sy chestra, and Louis S lish horn in the or be the soloists.
The Kroll Quartet
a program of cham the regular Wedne music series. Th include Beethoven's
18, No. 1 and Qu and the Quartet No
This series of ch concerts is pres benefit of the Be Center's Scholarsh which the Kroll Q tributed its servi ning's program.

"Gala F
The annual "Gala
Tanglewood will

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 19 1962

Dr. Munch Will Conduct Three Concerts This Week

Famous Conductor to Retire Next Sunday; Adele Addison Soloist Today at Tanglewood

LENOX—Dr. Charles Munch will conduct three concerts at Tanglewood this week as the Berkshire Music Festival enters the final portion of its first extended season. Climax of the season will take place next Sunday afternoon (the 26th) when Dr. Munch conducts his final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert. Dr. Munch, ordered to rest by his physician two weeks ago because of the youthful pace he set for himself this season, will retire after 13 years as director of the internationally famous orchestra.

Adele Addison Soloist

Dr. Munch will conduct this afternoon's concert in the Music Shed at 2:30, next Saturday evening at 8 and his final appearance next Sunday afternoon.

For his concert this afternoon, Dr. Munch has invited Springfield soprano Adele Addison to join Lukas Foss, as conductor, in Foss' Time Cycle. Dr. Munch will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and he will present Gary Graffman as piano soloist in a performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1.

Dr. Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday there will be an open rehearsal at 10 a. m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 Dr. Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

Final Program

For his final concert next Sunday as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D Minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Next Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Conland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

The Kroll Quartet will present a program of chamber music at the regular Wednesday chamber music series. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1 and Quartet, Op. 132, and the Quartet No. 2 by Bartok. This series of chamber music concerts is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Scholarship Fund, to which the Kroll Quartet has contributed its services for the evening's program.

"Gala Evening"

The annual "Gala Evening", at Tanglewood will take place Thursday for the benefit of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Performances by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music will begin at 4 p. m. with the Tanglewood grounds opening at 3 p. m. The order of events consists of chamber music at 4 p. m. in the theater, music by Tanglewood composers at 5 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall, a fanfare at 6.45 p. m. at the Main House, a concert by the Tanglewood Choir on the porch of the Main House, and a performance of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and Festival Chorus at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed. Richard Burgin will conduct the student orchestra and chorus at this concert. Florence Kopleff, an alumna of the Berkshire Music Center, will be the soloist. Miss Kopleff has generously contributed her services for this performance.

The period between 6 p. m. and 6.45 p. m. Thursday has been designated as a picnic hour. Patrons are invited to bring a picnic or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood during this final week of the season, beginning with the student orchestra concert Tuesday at 8 p. m. The Aspects of Music seminar Friday at 3:15 p. m. will be devoted to recent American and European music. The final performances by the Berkshire Music Center students will be next Sunday's chamber music concert at 10 a. m.

This week's schedule at Tanglewood follows:

SUNDAY, AUG. 19
10 a. m., Music Hall
BMC Chamber Music
2:30 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Symphony No. 5 ..... Schubert
Time Cycle (Addison) ..... Foss
Conducted by Composer
Piano Concerto No. 1 (Graffman) ..... Brahms

TUESDAY, AUG. 21
8 p. m., Theater
Conductors Orchestra

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 22
8 p. m., Theater
Kroll Quartet
Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1 .... Beethoven
Quartet No. 2 ..... Bartok
Quartet, Op. 132 ..... Beethoven

THURSDAY, AUG. 23
Gala Evening
4 p. m., Theater
Chamber Music
5 p. m., Music Hall
Tanglewood Composers
6.45 p. m., Main House
Tanglewood Choir
8 p. m., Music Shed
BMC Orchestra, Festival Chorus
Richard Burgin, Conductor
Symphony No. 3 (Kopleff) .... Mahler

FRIDAY, AUG. 24
3.15 p. m., Music Hall
Aspects of Music
American, European Music
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Pierre Monteux, Conductor
Euryanthe Overture ..... Weber
Mathis der Maler ..... Hindemith
Symphony No. 1, C Minor ... Brahms

SATURDAY, AUG. 25
10 a. m., Music Shed
Open Rehearsal
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Symphonie Fantastique .... Berlioz
LaMer ..... Debussy
Daphnis, Chloe, Suite No. 2 ... Ravel

SUNDAY, AUG. 26
10 a. m., Music Hall
FMC Chamber Music
2:30 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Quiet City (Voisin, Speyer) .. Copland
Symphony No. 9 ..... Beethoven
(Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm)
Ode to Joy, Op. 125 ..... Schiller
(Festival Chorus, Student Choir, University of Montreal)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Albany Knickerbocker News
Friday, August 10, 1962

Editorials

Dr. Munch's Finale

On the afternoon of August 26 at Tanglewood, Dr. Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the magnificent Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. Then he will put his baton down—his career as musical director of the orchestra at an end.

It has been a good career. Perhaps its brightest moments have been neither in Tanglewood nor even in Boston, but in such far away places as Moscow and Leningrad and Tokyo. For history placed Dr. Munch in direction of the orchestra in an era of cultural exchanges between nations. The impact of the orchestra abroad was tremendous. Its appearance was a credit to America, and Dr. Munch (citizen of France but adopted citizen of the United States) shares hugely in that credit.

On the domestic scene he has had his critics. Some have complained that the programming has been staid and lacking in adventure. Others have sought to make the point that he failed to make sufficiently festive the Berkshire Music Festival that is Tanglewood's other name.

At Tanglewood history was not quite so kind to Dr. Munch as it was in his adventures abroad with the orchestra. There, more than anywhere else, he was in the shadow of the late Serge Koussevitzy. It was Dr. Koussevitzy who had brought Tanglewood to fruition, who had given it so much of his heart and his intellect that it will forever remain his monument.

So let the critics be forgot. Let us remember the music that Dr. Munch brought to fulfillment there in that great shed at Tanglewood. Let us remember the Berlioz program of a few years ago and the great Requiem, let us remember the delicate moments, the gay moods, the marches, the dances that were so often perfection under Dr. Munch's baton. Let us acknowledge all the great artists attracted to Tanglewood by that same musical director, let us remember all the new music that we heard and remember, too, the more familiar favorites.

In all his years with the Boston Symphony Dr. Munch has never sought the spotlight. He has been retiring and reticent. So when on that coming Sunday afternoon the orchestra sounds the last notes of the Ninth, it would not be unlike Dr. Munch to almost steal away.

But as he steals away, it will not be only the applause of those there present that follows him. He will be carrying with him the heartfelt good wishes, the thanks and the respect of the thousands who have heard his music at Tanglewood, in Boston and in far away places.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 17 1962

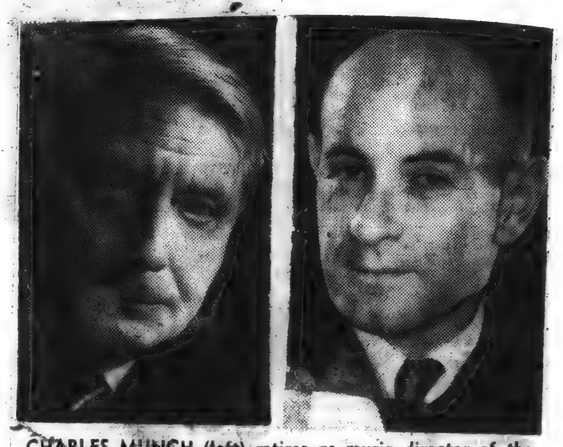
Munch To Retire At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the orchestra's eighty-first season and the twenty-fifth Berkshire Festival Sunday (Aug. 26; 2:30), with performances of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

Sunday's concert will be Dr. Munch's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for 13 years. During his tenure with the Orchestra, Dr. Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premiers.

In his thirteen years as music director, he brought honor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the Orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The Orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 18 1962



CHARLES MUNCH (left) retires as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after conducting his last concert of this season on Aug. 26. Thirteen years with the Boston group, he will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf (right) in September.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 24, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 18 1962

Next Week Final At Tanglewood

The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch from his post after thirteen years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler", (Mathias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday (Aug. 25) there will be an Open Rehearsal at 10:00 A.M. for the benefit of the Boston Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8:00 P.M. Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his concert Sunday (Aug. 26) as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English Horn in the Orchestra, will be the soloists.

124

AL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
MPLETE NEW YORK
TATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 19, 1962

Dr. Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsing for his final appearance at Tanglewood next Sunday.

Music Festival's Season Ends Soon

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the orchestra's Eighty-first season and the Twenty-fifth Berkshire Festival Sunday, Aug. 26 at 2:30 p. m., with performances of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

The concert will be Doctor Munch's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for thirteen years. During his tenure with the orchestra, Doctor Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres.

In his thirteen years as music director, Doctor Munch brought honor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Doctor Munch and the Boston Symphony. Doctor Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the Orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The Orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Doctor Munch as the orchestra's muic director in September, have invited Doctor Munch to retun next season as guest conductor at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge, and Providence. In addition to his concerts with this orchestra, Doctor Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, Nati[illegible] Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
AUG 26 1962

Berkshire Finale

The 1962 Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be concluded this afternoon at 2:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. This concert will also mark the actual farewell of Dr. Charles Munch as music director of the Orchestra.

The program will consist of "Quiet City," by Aaron Copland, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloist in the latter will be Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. The chorus will be the Berkshire Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de Montreal.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060
AUG 19 1962

MUNCH RETIRING—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the Orchestra's season and the 25th Berkshire Festival Sunday, Aug. 26, with performances of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

This concert will be Dr. Munch's last as music director of the Boston Symphony, a post he has held for 13 years. During his tenure he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 U.S. premieres, and 39 world premieres.

This autumn Dr. Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. He has invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals.

He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

ALBANY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Thursday, August 23, 1962

The Last Concert

The Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is a Massachusetts event. But in mileage and spirit it is close to thousands of people in our own area who for a quarter-century have found its sound of music and its spaciously landscaped grounds a seasonal delight.

For this reason, we join our neighbors over the state line in regretting that the time has come to retire for one of the men who have made Tanglewood the world-famous center of music that it is.

On Sunday, Dr. Charles Munch, for thirteen years the music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts his last concert in "The Shed." During his tenure, he has brought not only pleasure to countless music lovers, but has won plaudits the world over.

With Dr. Munch go our best wishes. And our gratitude.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 21 1962

Munch to Close His Career At Tanglewood on Sunday

The coming weekend's concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, the eighth and final series of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, will mark the retirement of Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For his final concert Sunday Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Dr. Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is Music Director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

The program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for strings, trumpet and English horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the Orchestra, will be the soloists.

Other Concerts

Dr. Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday there will be an Open Rehearsal at 10 a.m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 p.m. Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie Fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "Le Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

The Kroll Quartet will present a program of chamber music at the regular Wednesday chamber music series. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1 and Quartet, Op. 132, and the Quartet No. 2 by Bartok. This series of chamber music concerts is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Scholarship Funds, to which the Kroll Quartet has contributed its services for this evening's program.

Gala Evening

The annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood will take place Thursday for the benefit of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Performances by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music will begin at 4 p.m. with the Tanglewood grounds opening at 3 p.m. The order of events consists of chamber music at 4 p.m. in the theater, music by Tanglewood composers at 5 p.m. in the chamber music hall, a fanfare at 6:45 p.m. at the main house, a concert by the Tanglewood choir on the porch of the main house, and a performance of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and Festival Chorus at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed. Richard Burgin will conduct the student orchestra and chorus at this concert. Florence Kopleff, an alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center, will be the soloist.

The period between 6 p.m. and 6:45 p.m. Thursday has been designated as a picnic hour. Patrons are invited to bring a picnic or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited to three events at Tanglewood during this final week of the season, beginning with the student orchestra concert Tuesday at 8 p.m. The Aspects of Music seminar on Friday at 3:15 p.m. will be devoted to recent American and European music. The final performances by the Berkshire Music Center students will be at Sunday's chamber music concert at 10 a.m.

DAILY PRESS
ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.

WED
CLIPPING SERV
CALDWELL, N.
CApitol 6-40

RETIRES

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will part company following the last concert of the Berkshire Festival next Sunday at Tanglewood. The veteran director is retiring after 13 years as music director, during which time he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 Boston firsts, 58 U.S. premieres and 39 world premieres.

CHARLES MUNCH
Retires

Munch has chosen for his final chores Aaron Copland's "Quiet City", and the Beethoven Ninth.

He will be succeeded on Sept. 1 by Erich Leinsdorf. Munch has been invited back next season as guest conductor for several performances.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, August 24, at 8:00

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

WEBER — Overture to "Euryanthe"

HINDEMITH — Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter")

I. Angelic Concert
II. Entombment
III. Temptation of Saint Anthony

Intermission

BRAHMS — *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68

I. Un poco sostenuto; allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; allegro non troppo, ma con brio

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, August 25, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BERLIOZ — *Fantastic Symphony, Op. 14a

I. Reveries, Passions
Largo; Allegro agitato e appassionato assai
II. A Ball
Waltz: Allegro non troppo
III. Scene in the Meadows
Adagio
IV. March to the Scaffold
Allegretto non troppo
V. Dream of the Witches' Sabbath
Larghetto; Allegro

Intermission

DEBUSSY — *La Mer (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

RAVEL — *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, August 26, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

COPLAND — Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn
Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN English Horn: LOUIS SPEYER

Intermission

BEETHOVEN — *Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125

I. Allegro ma non troppo, un poco maestoso
II. Molto vivace: Presto
III. Adagio molto e cantabile
IV. Presto: Allegro
Allegro assai
Presto
Baritone Recitative
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro assai
Tenor Solo and Chorus: Allegro assai vivace, alla marcia Chorus: Andante maestoso
Adagio ma non troppo, ma divoto
Allegro energico, sempre ben marcato
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro ma non tanto
Chorus: Prestissimo

FESTIVAL CHORUS prepared by ALFRED NASH PATTERSON and UNIVERSITY OF MONTREAL CHORUS, FERNAND GRATON, Director

ADELE ADDISON, Soprano JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto DONALD GRAMM, Baritone

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

126

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363

AUG 24 1962

Charles Munch About To Retire

Not 'Goodbye,' Just 'So Long'

By ALTA MALONEY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra says goodbye to this week-end to Charles Munch, its Music Director for the past 13 years.

But the farewell will really be more in the nature of a "solong," since Dr. Munch has already to come back this season as a guest conductor.

The retiring conductor will close the orchestra's 81st season, its 25th at the Berkshire Festival, with the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, a work appropriate for the emotional occasion.

Also on Sunday's program will be Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," fititng as a reminder to Symphony patrons of the increase in the playing of contemporary music during Dr. Munch's tenure.

The Munch period has seen performances of 168 contemporary works; 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

Among the honors brought to Symphony Orchestra by Dr. Munch were two American International Music Fund Awards.

Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

The Music Director extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present eight-week season, totalling 24 concerts. With these, 81 Boston concerts, 36 on tour, Arthur Fiedler's 59 Pops and 21 Esplanade concerts add up to 221 concerts in a 50-week season. This is the longest concert sesaon of any privately supported orchestra in the world.

In addition to concerts this season as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch will appear with the Chicago Symphony, Nation Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Next autumn he will conduct hte French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. He has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals.

He has also been invited by the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, JaJpan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin and Radio Florence. Other possible appearances are with the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic and the Suisse Romande.

Besides this, he may do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission. This is retirement, Dr. Munch?

CHARLES MUNCH rehearses with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the final 1962 Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon at 2:30, his last appearance with the orchestra as its Music Director.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

AUG 22 1962

Around the Town

It's 'Last Call' For Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Last call for the Tanglewood Music Festival! It closes at 2:30 p. m. Sunday when the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by its retiring conductor, Charles Munch, will present Beethoven's "Ninth" or Choral Symphony with an augmented chorus and four fine soloists in the big shed.

The idea of "Music Under the Moon" in the heart of Berkshires was two years old when in 1936, the festival board invited the Boston Symphony Orchestra to present three concerts in a tent, temporarily erected on the lawns of the former Vanderbilt estate in Lenox. A severe thunderstorm, where, according to one critic, "even the French horns were shipping water," interrupted one concert and dramatically proved the inadequacy of the rented tent and the need for a permanent covered structure.

A Plea Won $100,000

It was then that Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, a Berkshire resident and a member of the board of trustees of the Festival, made an impassioned plea to the audience and raised some $100,000 to erect the present shed seating 6,000.

On a pleasant Sunday afternoon, it is not unusual to find 8,000 music lovers, many of them children, seated on the lawn on blankets, surrounded by elaborate box lunches.

Since 1936, the Berkshire Festival has grown into an internationally renowned center, visited each season by more than a quarter of a million persons. Practically in Albany's back yard (45 miles distant and within an hour and 15 minutes motoring time, the festival has erroneously been called the "Salzburg of America." It is more than that. It is one of the finest, if not the finest musical festival of the year with what is generally admitted to be the finest orchestra in America or Europe. The 210-acre estate with the formal gardens and shaded lawns was presented to the orchestra in 1936 by Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, and her sister, Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

Huge Throng Expected

It is anticipated that the greatest audience of all times will convene at Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon, for the monumental Beethoven 9th, and to wish Mr. Munch Godspeed on his journey to his home in Europe.

However, there is the comforting assurance that the beloved conductor will return to Tanglewood for a four-weeks series of guest concerts, next year, when a 10-weeks' series of concerts is being discussed.

The concerts in the big shed with the marvelous acoustical properties are not unlike a visit to the United Nations Building. One sees representatives from every country in the world. Saris vie for attention with the Bermuda short-ed men and be-slacked women who mill around the immaculate lawns and recline under the ancient trees.

Well, fellow music lovers: "That's all there is. There isn't anything more" until next year's July and August season. Don't be the one to say:

"I have never been to Tanglewood, but I plan to attend some day. Let it be this week!

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

AUG 19 1962

Charles Munch To Direct Last Tanglewood Concert

NEXT SUNDAY will be an historic day at Tanglewood in Lenox, scene of the Berkshire Festival. It will mark the retirement of Charles Munch from his post as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years. For his final program he has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, new director of the Worcester M... Festival Chorus.

During Munch's term as music director many honors have come to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra has received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the orchestra. Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds him as music director, have invited Dr. Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the orchestra at several concerts. He will also conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestras. In the autumn of this year, he will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
1962

Rehearsing for Final Concerts

Dr. Charles Munch, who will retire next Sunday as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown rehearsing the orchestra for the final concerts of the 1962 season.

13 Years of Distinguished Leadership

LENOX—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the orchestra's 81st season and the 25th Berkshire Festival next Sunday at 2.30 p. m., with performances of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

Much Honor

Next Sunday's concert will be Dr. Munch's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for 13 years. During his tenure with the orchestra, Dr. Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres.

In his 13 years as music director, Dr. Munch brought honor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra received two American International Music Fund awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of recording Arts and Sciences awards for his recordings with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Guest Conductors

The orchestra's guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglwood in the past 13 seasons were: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar deCarvalho, Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Thor Johnson, Leon Kirchner, Pierre Monteux, Jean Morel, Eugene Ormandy, Hugh Ross, Carl Schuricht, William Steinberg and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor.

Dr. Munch extended the Berkshire Festival from six to its present season of eight weeks, bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts to 24. These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts in addition to Arthur Fiedler's 59 pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50-week season.

To Be Guest

The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Dr. Munch as the orchestra's music director in September, have invited Dr. Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence. In addition to his concerts with this orchestra, Dr. Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Next fall Dr. Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. Dr. Munch has additional invitations to conduct at the Monteux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals. He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

Principal Tanglewood Artists

RICHARD BURGIN — ADELE ADDISON — LUKAS FOSS — GARY GRAFFMAN

Principals in the final concerts of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival season at Tanglewood are: Adele Addison who will be heard this afternoon and next Sunday; Gary Graffman, piano soloist today; Lukas Foss, who will conduct his Time Cycle this afternoon; and Richard Burgin, conductor at Thursday's "Gala Evening" performance.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 22 1962

127

From the Third Row Orchestra - A Concertgoer's View Of Munch Retirement

The following article is contributed by a Boston concertgoer, and warmly supplements professional criticism during Charles Munch's concluding days as music director of the Boston Symphony.

By Emily Goode

"In the end it is the public who writes our history," said Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony, in his book, "I Am a Conductor."

Music critics have paid their tributes during these past months of the final Boston and Tanglewood concerts, but how does the public feel about "the dashing Alsatian" who remains, on the eve of retirement, just as dashing, just as Gallic, and almost as mysterious as when he first climbed the Symphony Hall podium in 1949?

Unlike his predecessor, Serge Koussevitsky, Dr. Munch has not been socially gregarious. He has not only shunned parties and the receptions, but the speed with which he emerges from the hall after a concert leaves the camera-poised crowd by the stage door gasping, with shutters untripped! When he has been pressed into personal appearances he has avoided speech-making. Yet to his audiences he is more than an extraordinarily handsome figure directing an orchestra.

"I love that man," wrote a Washington friend, after hearing the symphony on tour. "He has a radiance that comes through his music. It is a matter of spiritual quality as well as impeccable taste."

A man who sat beside me in the shed at Tanglewood frowned and grunted all through the open rehearsal.

* * *

"I don't like his tempos," he complained. "Too slow in the largos, then much too fast. In my book, Munch just isn't a Mozart man!"

"Then why did you stand in line for admission and race to get a good seat when you knew it would be a Mozart program?"

"Because I feel that right now, under Munch, the Boston Symphony is the greatest orchestra in the world. I can't hear it often enough. Besides, while I may not always agree with his interpretation I know Munch is one of the truly greats—as a man and a musician." I later discovered my neighbor to be an active music educator.

At Tanglewood I also met one of the Symphony Hall ushers, a college boy working for his tuition. "I just bought my 43rd Munch recording!" he boasted. "After I buy the Berlioz Requiem I'll start saving for something to play them on."

"You mean you just hoard the records and can't play them?"

"Sure. It means everything to get them before they are recalled. I want to remember Munch and his way with music forever!"

My violin teacher is a member of the orchestra and he tells me Munch expects "more than perfection. He wants 'heart' in our playing."

* * *

From my seat in the third row orchestra I can hear the conductor's directions to the men, see his marvelously expressive face and enjoy his exchanges with soloists. I've grown to watch for his hand-on-the-heart gesture, and the quick smile which tells the men they have done well. And I've sympathized with his look of disgust when the audience is noisy. Once, during an open rehearsal, someone in the balcony laughed at a mistake and Munch cast a blistering look upward.

After the final Boston reading of Beethoven's ninth, I mingled with the crowd which waited nearly two hours by the stage door to give the retiring conductor yet another expression of love and gratitude. I listened to comments from young students as well as long-time series subscribers. Some liked best his introduction of new works, others his way with the French composers.

"And don't forget his Brandenburg concerti," said a bearded youth.

"I admire the way he shunned the limelight," said a precise looking woman.

But a white-haired gentleman objected. "I wish he hadn't been so aloof. I would like to have known him."

"But we do know him," said the woman beside him. "We know him from his music and from his book." She brought the small volume from her handbag, saying, "I got it autographed tonight. Now listen to this, 'Music is an art that expresses the inexpressible. It rises far above what words can mean or the intelligence define.' Henry, you don't have to play golf with a man to know him. After thirteen years of Munch concerts I guess I know he's worth all we feel for him!"

Dr. Munch finally appeared. He looked surprised to see the crowd which packed the street, then smiled radiantly as we clapped and cheered.

* * *

Last Saturday at Tanglewood I was again waiting by the musicians' exit and again Dr. Munch made one of his lightning darts into his car. As he was driven slowly to the crowded path, Munch settled back in his seat and yawned. It was a relaxed, comfortable, I'm-all-by-myself sort of yawn and, as my eyes met those of another bystander, we both smiled.

"He doesn't know we were waiting to see him again," I remarked, "He thinks we came here just for the music."

"And so we did," replied the man, "but to me Munch is the music."

I am convinced that he is writing the Munch with gratitude and a We do not need to tell He himself best expre music-lover's relation the conductor in "the conductor is the which thousands hav warmth and light."

Added to our me the 13 years when he to Boston is anticipation return as guest con Though he shuns the pers word in Symphony Hall's Green Room, he speaks to us each through the music. In this we hear, in his own words, "his heart beat, his soul vibrate, and his emotions sing."

128

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 28 1962

Charles Munch—Guest Conductor

The quality which distinguishes Charles Munch is his spontaneity. He never cast music into a mold. In his long 13-year reign as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from which he is now retiring, he has seemed never to play the same piece twice in the same way. He is fired by the emotion of the moment. This made him almost unique in a world of musical personalities who stamp their brand on their music.

His sense of the freshness of the moment often caused the most professional and informed listeners to say they heard sounds and structures in familiar music that they never had heard before. And in those special moments in the concert hall when men and moods conspire, Dr. Munch could whip music into white heat and overwhelm musicians and audience with its greatness.

As a man he never enjoyed the limelight for its own sake. Those who have been close to him know how retiring and modest is his nature. He is not a showman. The men and women of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a genuine affection for him, in part because he chose the path of colleague and director rather than tyrant in finding his way through the age-old dilemma of how to weld many individualists and professionals into a unit. If this turned the discipline back to the men themselves, Munch could counter by stepping to the podium and hurling them into the unexpected.

He conducted the French repertoire better than anyone else. This was his bent. But he could attack German music with his own particular excitement, and he paid more scrupulous attention to contemporary composers than he was sometimes given credit for. This despite the fact that innovation requires much longer hours of studying scores than is generally recognized.

Dr. Munch is now looking forward to the international phase of his career appearing as guest conductor in many parts of the world. But he was an international figure already. One of the few giants.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
AUG 19 1962

He'll Keep on Conducting

Dr. Munch Won't Let Retirement End His Career

By ROBERT TAYLOR

DR. CHARLES MUNCH

In his 13 years as music director, Charles Munch brought lustre to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On the occasion of his Symphony Hall finale last spring, all Boston — including Mayor Collins in an unprecedented civic accolade — paid him homage. Next Sunday's concert at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, however, marks Dr. Munch's last as the director of the famous orchestra he has adorned so splendidly.

And so it is fitting to recall again some of the distinctions he has brought to his post. During his tenure with the orchestra he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 U.S. premieres and 39 world premieres.

Also, the Orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were bestowed on compositions first performed in New York City. The Bostonians garnered nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. The National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences honored Dr. Munch for his recordings (with the ESO) of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Future Plans

It has been a reign of glittering accomplishment, including the extension of the season the Berkshire Festival from six to eight weeks, 81 concerts in Boston) so that the Boston Symphony now boasts the longest season of any privately-supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50 week season.

This, of course, means continuous employment for the musicians; and for students, who hitherto might have found the concerts at Symphony Hall inaccessible, the Open Rehearsal became established.

What of Dr. Munch's future? Fortunately, he exhibits no inclination toward retirement. At 70 he looks forward to an active conducting schedule. It is well-known that Erich Leinsdorf, the succeeding conductor, and the trustees, want Dr. Munch as guest conductor this season at seveal concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence.

He has other commitments less well-known. To date:

Guest appearances with the Chicago Symphony, the National Symphony, the Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

In the autumn of this year he will conduct the French National Orchestra during its tour of the United States.

The Vienna, Prague, Montreux and Santander Festivals have all requested his services.

The Munch Years

He has been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

These offers comprise testimony of the world esteem which the French-born Charles Munch enjoys and which the years in Boston augment. The glowing years times in which one differed w an interpretation here, a temp there, a selection that Dr. Munc revived, a selection that he didn't But in retrospect they must rad iate the kindly light of his genia temper.

Statistics will blur, eventually: these always do. The arithmetical evidence of a conductawards are of topical significance, something to impress the management and provide music reviewers with a source when looking back on the intangible and evanescent past.

Like the finest of interpretive masters, his personal satisfaction derives from etching his name on vivid air. Charles Munch, the lifeenhancing artist, still exists in the great orchestra he inherited, and which, next Sunday, he passes on. It is not too late to affirm our affection and admiration. It is never too late for that.

Reception Here For Dr. Munch

A reception in honor of Charles Munch, retiring next week as Director of the Berkshire Music Center, will be given by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation today at the home of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky.

In speaking of the reception, Mrs. Koussevitzky, President of the foundation, said that "it is given in recognition of Dr. Munch's many memorable performances of works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and of his directorship of the Berkshire Music Center."

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
HUDSON REGISTER STAR
Tuesday, August 21, 1962

Area Attractions Enter Last Week

Summer time is running out for two of this area's most interesting and appealing attractions.

At Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass., Charles Munch will conduct his last concerts this week before retirement.

The Berkshire Music Festival program in its last week includes: Wednesday, Aug. 22, 8 p.m., Chamber Music Concert by the Kroll Quartet, held in the Festival Theatre; Thursday, Aug. 23, Gala Evening Concert; Friday, 8 p.m., in the Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux, playing the "Euryanthe Overture," Weber; Mathis der Maler," Hindemith; and "Symphony No 1," Brahms; Saturday, 8 p.m., Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch in the Shed, "Symphonie Fantastique," Berlioz; "La Mer," Debussy; and "Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2," Ravel; and finally, Sunday, Aug. 26, at 2:30 p.m. in the Shed, Charles Munch conducting the orchestra in "Quiet City," Copland, and "Symphony No. 9," Beethoven.

The Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival begins its last two weeks tomorrow.

Featured this week through Saturday evening are Maria Tallchief and Scott Douglas in a Classic Ballet, Pas de deux; The First Chamber Dance Quartet in a premiere of a new work and Balasaraswati and four musicians from South India in their United States debut.

Four performances next week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 24 1962

Records May Fall at Festival With a Weather Break

TANGLEWOOD — With a break from the weatherman, the final concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival over the weekend are expected to draw the biggest crowds of the 1962 eight-week season, especially Sunday afternoon when the BSO conductor, Dr. Charles Munch will give his final performance as musical director of the orchestra after 13 years.

For his final concert Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be the soloists.

Former BMC Student

The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Dr. Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus from Montreal, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Sunday's concert will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn." Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the BSO, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

2,545 at Gala

Saturday morning at 10, the final rehearsal of the season will be open to the public and the proceeds will benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Last night the "Gala Evening" program held for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center was staged before a crowd of 2,545 in a variety of demonstrations by the students, aided by Richard Burgin and Seymour Lipkin of the faculty who shared conducting honors, and Florence Kopleff, alto, who was soloist at the Shed concert, which climaxed the day's activities. Miss Kopleff donated her services for the benefit.

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, chairman of the committee for the benefit, explained that the problem of financing the BMC, the summer school of the BSO, "has always been a thorny one, inasmuch as it is done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is already dependent on contributions for its continuation, and because students of music are seldom persons of means."

Scholarships at the Center, the committee chairman explained, take the form of grants toward tuition from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, which has been established by gifts from RCA Victor, the Rockefeller Foundation and others.

"But the continued sources of financial aid to the Tanglewood student are not sufficient to meet the costs of training him here," Mrs. Koussevitzky explained, adding "the annual deficit on the Music Center's operation is met by the BSO. In order to carry on the work of the Center, additional scholarship aid is needed."

Tonight Pierre Monteux will make his fourth and final appearance at the Berkshire Festival as conductor of the BSO. The concert starts at 8.

Tomorrow night Dr. Munch will be on the podium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • R
Transcript-Tele
HOLYOKE
Circ. 26,
SEP 8

The Best Other Ed

Charles Mun

The quality which Charles Munch is hi He never cast music in his long 13-year r cal director of the phony Orchestra fr is now retiring, he never to play the sam in the same way. He the emotion of the m made him almost world of musical pers stamp their brand on His sense of the fre moment often caus professional and int ers to say they hear structures in famili they never had hear in those special m concert hall when me conspire. Dr. Munch music into white he whelm musicians with its greatness. As a man he nev limelight for its o who have been close how retiring and mo ture. He is not a s men and women o Symphony Orchestra ine affection for h cause he chose the league and direct tyrant in finding h the age-old dilem weld many individ fessionals into a u ed the discipline b themselves, Munc ter by stepping to hurling them into He conducted the toire better than an was his bent. But h German music wi ticular excitement more scrupulous a temporary compos sometimes given despite the fact requires much l studying score recognized. Dr. Munch is r ward to the int of his career ap conductor in ma world. But he was figure already. giants. — Christia tor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
SE

The Best From Other Editors

Charles Munch

The quality which distinguishes Charles Munch is his spontaneity. He never cast music into a mold. In his long 13-year reign as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from which he is now retiring, he has seemed never to play the same piece twice in the same way. He is fired by the emotion of the moment. This made him almost unique in a world of musical personalities who stamp their brand on their music. His sense of the freshness of the moment often caused the most professional and informed listeners to say they heard sounds and structures in familiar music that they never had heard before. And in those special moments in the concert hall when men and moods conspire. Dr. Munch could whip music into white heat and overwhelm musicians and audience with its greatness.

As a man he never enjoyed the limelight for its own sake. Those who have been close to him know how retiring and modest is his nature. He is not a showman. The men and women of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a genuine affection for him, in part because he chose the path of colleague and director rather than tyrant in finding his way through the age-old dilemma of how to weld many individualists and professionals into a unit. If this turned the discipline back to the men themselves, Munch could counter by stepping to the podium and inspiring them into the unexpected. He conducted the French repertoire better than anyone else. This was his bent. But he could attack German music with his own particular excitement, and he paid more scrupulous attention to contemporary composers than he was sometimes given credit for. This despite the fact that innovation requires much longer hours of studying score than is generally recognized.

Dr. Munch is now looking forward to the international phase of his career appearing as guest conductor in many parts of the world. But he was an international figure already. One of the few giants. — Christian Science Monitor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 28 1962

To Dr. Munch: Only Farewell

Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony, and Charles Munch have never belonged to Massachusetts. They belong to audiences everywhere—by radio and recordings on one route, and on another by personal participation in the experience of great music performed by an extraordinary orchestra under a dedicated conductor.

But Dr. Munch's following, in the 13 years he has directed this splendid complement of musicians, has included ourselves and, of course, thousands in this part of the state during the Berkshire Festivals. Thus Western Massachusetts shared deeply in the appreciation expressed Sunday afternoon after his final appearance as musical director.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony furnished an eminently appropriate climax to the association that Dr. Munch's audiences have felt with his endeavors. The sung Fourth Movement, based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," looks to a time when "all men will be brothers." Charles Munch, through the Boston Symphony and the language of music, has had a role in keeping that time in sight.

Fortunately, his retirement will not be complete. We look forward to his return as guest conductor next year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

DURING THE FINAL week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, one always senses an atmosphere of excitement tempered with nostalgia. This is particularly noticeable this season as Charles Munch concludes his association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years as its conductor. Many tributes have been paid to Dr. Munch, and he has made a host of friends both in America and abroad during his hundreds of appearances with the orchestra. He, in turn, presented his orchestra with his own tribute this season by inviting ten members to appear as soloists—high testimony of a conductor's respect for the ability of his musicians.

* * *

AT THE Berkshire Music Center Orchestra's concert last Tuesday I was reminded of how meliorating music can be in a world troubled with a jumble of international problems. The personnel of this student orchestra is made up of young musicians from many countries whose relations with one another have been strained over a period of years. The ability to perform and enjoy great music transcends these problems with which nations are involved, and chauvinism becomes subservient to the goals of musical training.

But musicians do not lose sight of their national heritage by any means. For instance, portions of the student chamber music program on August 14 were devoted to honoring the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Claude Debussy. French students Marcelle Verignon and Martine Joste played Debussy's Sonata for Violoncello and Piano, and Jean Mouillere and Michel Bernholc performed his Sonata for Violin and Piano.

* * *

AS THIS COLUMN reaches print, we rapidly are approaching the end of this twenty-fifth season of the Berkshire Festival. Come Monday, August 27, Tanglewood will revert to the same silence of the afternoon in mid-June when I began this series. Now it will be broken by trucks carrying instruments, pianos, and other paraphernalia away from the main gate and back to Boston for the opening of its winter season in Symphony Hall on September 21, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

A number of events in the orchestra's calendar are worthy of note. Since it is the oldest orchestra to visit New York during the season, the Boston Symphony will have the honor of presenting the second concert in the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center on September 24.

Continued on next page

In April at the close of the Boston season, the Orchestra will embark on a transcontinental tour to Chicago, Kansas City, Missouri, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis. Many people who have been to Tanglewood this summer will then be able to hear the orchestra in their own cities.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY has recently engaged in a new endeavor—nationwide television. In association with the Seven Arts Associated the orchestra has released a series of thirteen one-hour television concerts which will be telecast in more than twenty cities in the United States.

Charles Munch's final concert on Sunday will be video taped for history and presented on Boston's WGBH-TV on September 4. Thus the Boston Symphony moves on from its summer home at Tanglewood to Boston and ultimately to a national audience.

Tanglewood is not forgotten, however, as already many things have been planned for next season. Erich Leinsdorf has planned a major world premiere for the Berkshire Festival, and a number of other changes will be announced while the snows are yet deep on the great lawns of this lovely estate.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
AUG 23 1962

The Last Concert

The Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is a Massachusetts event. But in mileage and spirit it is close to thousands of people in our own area who for a quarter-century have found its sound of music and its spaciously landscaped grounds a seasonal delight.

For this reason, we join our neighbors over the state line in regretting that the time has come to retire for one of the men who have made Tanglewood the world-famous center of music that it is.

On Sunday, Dr. Charles Munch, for thirteen years the music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts his last concert in "The Shed." During his tenure, he has brought not only pleasure to countless music lovers, but has won plaudits the world over.

With Dr. Munch go our best wishes. And our gratitude.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,861 S. 31,200
AUG 26 1962
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,675
AUG 19 1962
CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, August 26, 1962

Dr. Munch to Direct Final Concert Today

For his final concert today as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Dr. Charles Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9, in D Minor," with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy, Op, 125."

Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Dr. Munch, the Festival chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire festival.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn." Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

130

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, August 19, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, August 20, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
AUG 18 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350
AUG 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 23 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
AUG 19 1962

OSWEGO, N.Y.
PALLADIUM-TIMES
D. 15,065
AUG 18 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
AUG 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
AUG 23 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
OSWEGO PALLADIUM TIMES
Saturday, August 18, 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,861 S. 31,200
AUG 19 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
AUG 18 1962

Dr. Munch to End Season At Berkshire on Aug. 26

CHARLES MUNCH
In Final Performance

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the orchestra's 81st season and the 25th Berkshire Festival Aug. 26 at the concert at 2:30 p.m., which will be Dr. Munch's last as music director of the orchestra, a post he has held for 13 years.

* * *

THE PROGRAM FOR Aug. 26 will include performances of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and the "Ninth Symphony" of Beethoven.

During Dr. Munch's tenure with the orchestra, he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premiers and 39 world premiers.

This fall, Dr. Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. He has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals. He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

* * *

IN THE 13 YEARS which Dr. Munch has served as music director of the Boston Symphony, the orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony. Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Moxartgemeinde.

The orchestra's guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival during the past 13 seasons have included Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar deCarvalho, Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Thor Johnson, Leon Kirchner, Pierre Monteux, Jean Morel, Eugene Ormandy, Hugh Ross, Carl Schuricht, William Steinberg and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor.

* * *

DR. MUNCH extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present season of eight weeks, bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts each season to 24. These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts in addition to Arthur Feidler's 59 Pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world—221 concerts in a 50-week season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and Erich Leindorf, who succeeds Dr. Munch as the orchestra's music director in September, have invited Dr. Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence. In addition to his concerts with the Boston Orchestra next season, Dr. Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
AUG 19 1962

LEADS SYMPHONY . . . Conductor Charles Munch rehearses the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the final concert of the season next Sunday at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64 387
AUG 25 1962

131

THE AISLE SEAT

Munch Waves Farewell To Tanglewood Era

By TED STRONGIN

ANOTHER era in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra draws to a close tomorrow afternoon in the great Shed at Tanglewood. At this time and place Charles Munch conducts his last concert as director of the great orchestra's musical fortunes.

It was the Koussevitzky era, just before Munch's that made Tanglewood possible. The school plus the festival of concerts on the beautiful estate were a vision of Koussevitzky's mind. The late maestro made the vision become a full-fledged reality.

During the Munch era the reality has turned into the most successful and bestknown- musical reality in the world. Day by day, Tanglewood outdraws everything in the Northeast except the thoroughbred races. And the Tanglewood season is longer than any one thourghbred season. Dr. Munch extended his summer span from six to eight weeks. There is little doubt that he has made Tanglewood appeal to a far wider audience than the usual one for so-called serious music.

Dr. Munch will be sorely missed by many. To countless thousands of summer visitors he represents sunny afternoons, starry evenings, heart-warming music and peace for the soul. He is very much loved by his followers

He will continue to lead an active life, with worldwide guest appearances already scheduled. These include three next season with the Boston Symphony itself.

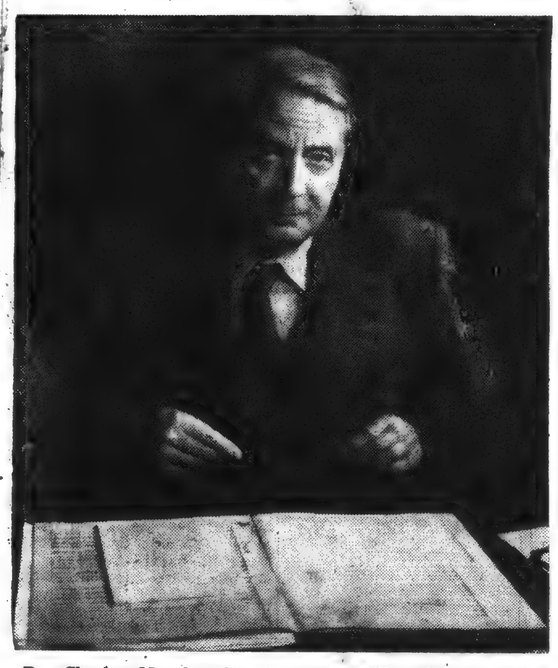
Meanwhile, we look forward to the new era under the helm of Dr. Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf. Mr. Leinsdorf has already underscored his great interest in the Berkshire Music Center, the school associated with Tanglewood. It's an open secret that Dr. Munch's greatest enthusiasm did not always lead in that direction.

no doubt Mr. Leinsdorf will reveal changes of accent amming, interpretation and taste as time goes on. welcome. Change is tonic.

CHARLES MUNCH: Flowering of a musical reality.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 26 1962

From Score...



Dr. Charles Munch, after 13 years, will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon as he conducts the final concert of the Tanglewood season at 2.30 in the Music Shed.

Second Thoughts On Music

Inherently Modest Man Is Undisputed Leader of BSO

Charles Munch Will Retire Today After 13 Years As Director of Boston Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Today, Aug. 26, 1962, we bid farewell to Charles Munch, who for the last 13 years has been music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Munch replaced Serge Koussevitzky and this was not an easy task. Founder of the Berkshire Music Center and Berkshire Festival, he had guided its destinies with unerring skill, and his dynamic personality and baton manner had generated an excitement which had seemed impossible for anyone else to duplicate. In fact no one else has to date. This quiet-mannered personality, wholly engrossed in music, was not the type to win instant affection from an audience. However, over the years his intense devotion to music, his impeccable taste and his modesty and humility slowly won him a place unique in Boston Symphony Orchestra annals. Today the orchestra is wholly his; its tone quality is his; his word has become law. The Boston Symphony players now seem to play for him with the same enthusiasm that they showed for Serge Koussevitzky. Thus an inherently modest man has become the undisputed leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Added Depth

Charles Munch came to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall of 1949, with a small repertoire which he had used for many years as visiting guest conductor. Now, with a 50-week season, he has expanded his repertoire to meet its needs. Still a champion of French music, he has his favorites and Tanglewood audiences have heard them year after year. But each year he seems to have added something in depth of understanding and intensity of feeling. His sincerity is always apparent.

His intention to retire because of indifferent health caused a scramble among the conductors, for this is a juicy post. Erich Leinsdorf was the lucky one. I think he will bring to the orchestra a greatly enlarged repertoire and certainly a precision which it has lost during the Munch regime. I suspect German works will take over the large French repertoire which Munch has built up. We shall miss the gentle presence and shock of white hair which seemed to be Munch's trademark.

When he first came here, he spoke to the orchestra very briefly, saying "We shall make beautiful music together." Beautiful music has been made. There have been moments of agonizing contemporary music, but this music has as much right to be heard as the first music written by Brahms or Beethoven.

All Have Learned

During the 12 summers he has officiated at the Berkshire Music Festival, he has brought to the audiences some of the great works of Bach and Mozart, playing them with devotion born of an inborn sense of beauty and form. We have all learned something from him; something which no one can take away.

To realize the extent and magnitude of the task Dr. Munch took over 13 years ago, one need only scan these figures: he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres. No wonder he is fatigued. We bid him a fond farewell, and may his future musical efforts bring the same contentment that they have brought to the thousands who have heard him during the last 13 years. We wish him well.

PROGRAM TODAY AT TANGLEWOOD

SUNDAY AUG. 26
10 a. m., Music Hall
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Quiet City (Voisin
Speyer ..... Copland
Symphony No. 9 .... Beethoven
(Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm)
Ode to Joy, Op. 125 ... Schiller
(Festival Chorus, Student Choir, University of Montreal)

...To Fore

When Dr. Munch puts his baton down this afternoon at Tanglewood he hopes to be able to join the ranks of the golf world. Replacing the divots should produce a more relaxing advocation for the conductor.

132

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 25 1962

Charles Munch In Photographs

THOUSANDS OF PICTURES have been taken of Charles Munch in the 13 years since he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The collection on these two pages, all taken in the Berkshires, is not a chronological summary of those years but rather an attempt to suggest the character of this man who has added considerably to the orchestra's dignity and stature. Dr. Munch has the temperament of the artist, not the executive, and has always remained somewhat aloof from the hubbub surrounding the operation of a large business, preferring the company of a few fellow musicians to the demands of a busy public life. For relaxation he plays golf. For pleasure he collects art. For his work he devotes his life.

Manos

The concert is under way.

Tague

Mr. Munch studies with a collector's eye an exhibit at Clark Art Institute.

Tague

He pauses in a narrow passage between hedges in the formal gardens.

Tague

An occasional game of golf is Munch's chief recreation. Here he stops on the edge of a fairway at Pittsfield Country Club.

Manos

Batons and music scores add to conductor's solitude before concert.

Plouffe

Mr. Munch in the driver's seat beside his chauffeur and valet, Roger Toureau.

Tague

With violinist Zino Francescatti.

Whitestone

Rehearsing, 1961.

Whitestone

With conductor Pierre Monteux

Mamas

Hugh Ross, Berkshire Music Center choral director, talks with Mr. Munch prior to a concert with the Festival Chorus.

Mamas

Conducting the Boston Symphony, 1956.

Patrovec

Munch engages in a quick conversation with Rudolph Serkin.

134

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Tomorrow Is the Last Time

Magos

At tomorrow afternoon's final 1962 concert at Tanglewood, Dr. Charles Munch will raise his baton over the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last time as permanent conductor. Successor to the late Serge Koussevitzky, he has for some 13 years maintained the orchestra's long-established reputation as one of the world's greatest ensembles. (Two pages of today's "Berkshire Week" supplement are given over to retrospective photos.)

Dr. Munch: A Tribute

By JAY C. ROSENFELD
Eagle Music Critic

The Beethoven ninth symphony tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood will be Charles Munch's valedictory. It marks the end of an era, not only for him, but for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in both its homes, Boston and Tanglewood.

"Farewell" is a heartbreaking word, but this should be a "valediction forbidding mourning." Rather more appropriate are the words of Schiller which Beethoven uses in "the" ninth: "O, friends and brothers, . . . raise your voices and sing in glad, free measure."

Munch has graced the Boston Symphony podium for thirteen years, longer at Tanglewood, in fact, than Koussevitzky, who brought the orchestra here in 1936 but whose term, because of transportation restrictions in the war years, was not as uninterrupted as that of Munch.

What more appropriate for such a significant event than Beethoven's choral symphony? It has served for so many occasions of special solemnity, notably the concert with which Koussevitzky dedicated the new Tanglewood Shed in which tomorrow Munch gives his "concert d'adieu."

Fortunately this leave-taking will not be a permanent severance of ties because he will be back in Boston, at least, as guest conductor next year for four weeks, as he will be for an equal term in both Philadelphia and Chicago, and for shorter visits with the orchestras of Washington and Pittsburgh. Then he will pursue his art in South America, Japan, Australia, Switzerland, Italy, Spain and Israel. He seems to have taken George Washington's advice from his farewell in which he vowed it would now be his "policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

Munch will take with him from Boston and Tanglewood, indeed from all America, many honors, but more indelibly the record of his accomplishments. He has a large, fine-looking figure, a full head of white hair, eyes blue and a little sad; is taciturn, almost timid except when in front of his orchestra, when he becomes imperious without haughtiness.

His style of conducting depended on excitement generated on stage more than on effects planned and worked out in detail in rehearsal. It has been the pleasant task of this viewer to comment on his art these many years and, at our distance, to develop a devotion and a respect for him so that his departure now will be recorded with genuine regret for us as it will be for the men of his orchestra and the public.

We presume to speak for all Berkshire when we say we will always retain warm memories of him and his artistry, and can only hope that, once again more permanently installed in his home at Louveciennes, his memories will include the cordiality with which he was always welcomed among us.

EWS BUREAU
NY.
TER
GS YORK
ARGUS
2, 1962
NEWS BUREAU
N.Y.
APER
INGS
NEW YORK
RVICE
D STATESMAN
22, 1962
TY NEWS BUREAU
NY. N.Y.
SPAPER
PPINGS
NEW YORK
ERVICE
CATSKILL MAIL
ust 23, 1962
TY NEWS BUREAU
LBANY. N.Y.
WSPAPER
IPPINGS
E NEW YORK
SERVICE
ITHENS HERALD
August 23, 1962
TY NEWS BUREAU
BANY. N.Y.
WSPAPER
PPINGS
E NEW YORK
ERVICE
POST STANDARD
ugust 19, 1962
TY NEWS BUREAU
LBANY. N.Y.
WSPAPER
PPINGS
E NEW YORK
SERVICE
MANHATTAN EAST
ust 23, 1962
TY NEWS BUREAU
BANY. N.Y.
WSPAPER
PPINGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE STUDY GAZETTE
August 21, 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 99,075 S. 102,588

AUG 19 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

AUG 25 1962

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
SUN. 312,266

SEP 9 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

AUG 21 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

AUG 21 1962

CAIRO, N.Y.
HERALD
W 350

AUG 23 1962

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D, 106,635

AUG 21 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 43,126

AUG 22 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 21,457

AUG 20 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091

AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

AUG 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580

AUG 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

AUG 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 18 1962

MUNCH PLANS BUSY SCHEDULE IN RETIREMENT

Boston Symphony Director Leaves Post Aug. 26 After 13 Years

LENOX—The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Guest Appearances

But in retirement he will be very busy. The orchestra trustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Munch as the orchestra's music director in September, have invited him to return next season as guest conductor of the orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge, and Providence.

In addition to his concerts with this orchestra, he has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This autumn Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States, and he has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals.

In Europe

Also he has been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

During his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Munch presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

In his 13 years as music director, Munch brought honor to the orchestra. The orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Munch and the symphony.

Several Awards

He was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences awards for his recordings with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

The orchestra's guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, in the past 13 seasons were: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar deCarvalho, Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Thor Johnson, Leon Kirchner, Pierre Monteux, Jean Morel, Eugene Ormandy, Hugh Ross, Carl Schuricht, William Steinberg and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor.

Munch extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present season of eight weeks, bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts to 24.

221 Concerts

These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts in addition to Arthur Fiedler's 59 Pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50-week season.

Doctor Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program for his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Aug. 25 there will be an open rehearsal at 10 a. m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea) by Debussy and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" ballet, Suite No. 2.

Final Concert

For his final concert Aug. 26 as music director of the orchestra and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125.

Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

The Aug. 26 program will begin at 2:30 with a performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for strings, trumpet and English horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

The Kroll Quartet will present a program of chamber music at the regular Wednesday chamber music series. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1, and Quartet, Op. 132, and the Quartet No. 2 by Bartok.

This series of chamber music concerts is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Scholarship Funds, to which the Kroll Quartet has contributed its services for this evening's program.

Gala Evening

The annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood will be Thursday for the benefit of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Performances by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music will begin at 4 with the Tanglewood grounds opening at 3.

The order of events consists of chamber music at 4 in the theater, music by Tanglewood composers at 5 in the Chamber Music Hall, a fanfare at 6.45 at the Main House, a concert by the Tanglewood Choir on the porch of the Main House, and a performanoe of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and Festival Chorus at 8 in the Music Shed.

Richard Burgin will conduct the student orchestra and chorus at this concert. Florence Kopleff, an alumna of the Berkshire Music Center, will be the soloist. Miss Kopleff has contributed her services for this performance.

The period between 6 and 6.45 Thursday has been designated as a picnic hour. Patrons are invited to bring a picnic or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood during this final week, beginning with the student orchestra concert Tuesday at 8.

The Aspects of Music seminar Friday at 3.15 will be devoted to recent American and European music. The final performances by the Berkshire Music Center students will be at the Aug. 26 chamber music concert at 10 a. m.

Today's Program

The Berkshire Festival concert today will be conducted by Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Russian music, featuring the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Tchaikovsky with Eugene Istomin as soloist.

Also to be heard will be Prokofiev's Classical Symphony and Symphony No. 6.

Charles Munch will conduct Sunday's 2.30 concert, but a portion of this program will be devoted to "Time Cycle" by Lukas Foss, with the composer conducting and Adele Addison, soprano, as solist.

Munch will direct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and he has invited Gary Graffman to be his guest for a performance of the Piano Concertop No. 1 by Brahms.

136

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050

AUG 25 1962

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire this weekend as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, cautions his orchestra.

Last Movement For Munch As Boston Symphony Head

LENOX, Mass. — The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This evening at 8 p.m. Dr. Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final conert on Sunday as music director and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The festival chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English Horn in the Orchestra, will be the soloists.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 22 1962

BEETHOVEN NINTH SOLOISTS, Adele Addison, soprano; John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto, and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be heard Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the final concert of the Berkshire Festival season, which also will mark the retirement of Charles Munch as the BSO musical director.

Festival Enters Final Week; Munch's Last Concert Sunday

TANGLEWOOD — The eighth and final week of the Berksnire Festival, which marks the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony, is expected to draw the largest crowds of the season to Tanglewood.

The Kroll Quartet will present a program of chamber music tonight at 8. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1 and Quartet, Op. 132, and the Quartet No. 2 by Bartok. This series of chamber music concerts is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Scholarship Funds, to which the Kroll Quartet has contributed its services for this evening's program.

Monteux's Fourth Appearance

Dr. Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday there will be an open rehearsal at 10 a.m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie Fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert Sunday Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Dr. Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Voisin, Speyer Soloists

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 23 1962

CHARLES MUNCH . . . Famous conductor of a famous orchestra, Dr. Munch will conduct his final concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Sunday.

Charles Munch Will Retire

The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Doctor Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as Music Director of the Boston Symphony.

Doctor Munch invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, August 24. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Hindemith's Symphony Mathis der Maler ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday, August 25 there will be an Open Rehearsal at 10:00 a.m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 p.m. Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be La Mer (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe, Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and on the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival on Sunday, August 26, Doctor Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be the soloists.

The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Université de Montréal.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English Horn

136

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
AUG 25 1962

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire this weekend as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, cautions his orchestra.

Last Movement For Munch As Boston Symphony Head

LENOX, Mass. — The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This evening at 8 p.m. Dr. Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert on Sunday as music director and the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone will be the soloists. The festival chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English Horn in the Orchestra, will be the soloists.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 22 1962

BEETHOVEN NINTH SOLOISTS, Adele Addison, soprano; John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto, and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be heard Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the final concert of the Berkshire Festival season, which also will mark the retirement of Charles Munch as the BSO musical director.

Festival Enters Final Week; Munch's Last Concert Sunday

TANGLEWOOD — The eighth and final week of the Berksnire Festival, which marks the retirement of Dr. Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony, is expected to draw the largest crowds of the season to Tanglewood.

The Kroll Quartet will present a program of chamber music tonight at 8. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 1 and Quartet, Op. 132, and the Quartet No. 2 by Bartok. This series of chamber music concerts is presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Scholarship Funds, to which the Kroll Quartet has contributed its services for this evening's program.

Monteux's Fourth Appearance

Dr. Munch has invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct Friday's Berkshire Festival program. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter") and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday there will be an open rehearsal at 10 a.m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the "Symphonie Fantastique," Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be "La Mer" (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert Sunday Dr. Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be the soloists. The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Dr. Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal. Fernand Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center, is music director of this chorus, which also appeared at Tanglewood at the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival.

Voisin, Speyer Soloists

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English horn in the orchestra, will be the soloists.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 23 1962

CHARLES MUNCH . . . Famous conductor of a famous orchestra, Dr. Munch will conduct his final concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Sunday.

Charles Munch Will Retire

The eighth and final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be an historic one in that it will mark the retirement of Doctor Charles Munch from his post after 13 years as Music Director of the Boston Symphony.

Doctor Munch invited his friend Pierre Monteux to conduct the Berkshire Festival program on Friday, August 24. Mr. Monteux will be making his fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season at Friday's concert. His program will include Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Hindemith's Symphony Mathis der Maler ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

On Saturday, August 25 there will be an Open Rehearsal at 10:00 a.m. for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. That evening at 8 p.m. Charles Munch will begin the Berkshire Festival program with the Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14a by Berlioz. Also to be heard will be La Mer (The Sea), by Debussy, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe, Ballet, Suite No. 2.

For his final concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and on the concluding program of the 1962 Berkshire Festival on Sunday, August 26, Doctor Munch has chosen as the major work Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, baritone, will be the soloists.

The Festival Chorus has been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. At the invitation of Charles Munch, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by Le Choeur des Etudiants de l'Université de Montréal.

Sunday's program will begin with a performance of Aaron Copland's Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Louis Speyer, English Horn

REVIEWS 8TH WEEK. 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

25 1962

Music Review

Monteux at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST concert of the final three of the season at Tanglewood brought Pierre Monteux as guest conductor to the podium for his fourth and last appearance of the summer. The venerable leader was recalled with ever-increasing enthusiasm at the conclusion of his program, and the members of the orchestra joined in the triumphal demonstration as heartily as the audience of over 5,200.

Monteux expressed his appreciation to the orchestra for their magnificent performance as much as to the audience for their homage and on one recall, embraced and bussed Concertmaster Richard Burgin on both cheeks a la Francaise in a gesture of which the touching import may not have been apparent to all. It was during the incumbency of Monteux at the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that Burgin originally took his post as principal first violinist and this was the last time that Burgin would occupy that chair under the baton of Monteux.

* * *

THE EVENING was bright and fresh and wraps were not superfluous, but it was bracing air for the orchestra and they never sounded better. The overture to "Euryanthe" of Weber opened the program and proceeded to the Hindemith symphony "Mathis der Maler." The circumstances of the composition of this work reveal the significance of the choice of the subject. It was in 1934 in Germany that Hindemith, living in one of the towers in the wall around Frankfort, was moved by the political atmosphere of the day to take the example of the Mathias Grunewald, a painter who lived in the time of the Reformation and who gave up his painting and joined in the struggle to free the oppressed peasants. The three movements are excerpts from an opera which was completed after the symphony and whose subtitles reveal the subject Hindemith was trying to express: "Angelic Concert," a short bridge slow movement, the "Entombment," and the "The Temptation of Saint Anthony."

* * *

THIS LAST movement was a tour de force. The strings have a very free cadenza introduction for 18 bars before the body of the movement is reached. This is written in the lower and most resonant areas of the instruments and remains there until the winds join in, at which time Hindemith moves them up where they still can emerge and hold their dominance.

The last half of the evening was devoted to the Brahms first, which has been heard from the Tanglewood stage by the Boston Orchestra under Koussevitzky, Carl Schuricht, Munch and Monteux. Monteux, by a skillful use of technic which does not allow a change of pace to become noticeable, keeps an urgency and forward tension to the first movement and keeps it consistently absorbing. The slow movement is one of the most lovely subjects in music, a heartfelt song which Monteux allowed his violins to utter with all the ample fervor at their command. The violin solos were done by Burgin with outstanding effectiveness.

* * *

BECAUSE OF the lengthened season this year, it was found expedient to call upon the veteran Monteux more than the previous years had offered opportunities. In any weighing of the efficacy of the altered schedule, the more frequent presence of Monteux must certainly be weighed on the favorable side.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885

AUG 30 1962

Tanglewood Reviews

Friday — by K. P. M.

Pierre Monteux's last Tanglewood appearance of this season as a guest conductor last Friday evening marked the presentation of one of the most magnificent concerts of a very fine summer. From the opening Overture to Euryanthe by Weber, the careful musical preparation taken by Mr. Monteux was marvelously evident.

Hindemith's Symphony Mathis der Maler (Matthias the Painter) should have been heard by anyone who does not believe that the twentieth century has produced beautiful music. The soaring flute passages which dominate the first two movements ("Angelic Concert" and "Entombment") were played with exceptional clarity and control, while the last movement ("Temptation of Saint Anthony") showed an integration of sound which is more often hoped for than found in symphonic performances.

The crowning glory of the evening came, appropriately, at the end when Brahms' Symphony #1 was given a genuinely inspired performance.

Saturday — by E. M.

Dr. Munch excited an overflow audience Saturday night with a program of the French romantic music he admires so much and does so well. The first selection was Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony — a sprawling amalgam of program music which requires virtuoso conducting lest it lose continuity. All five selections were well done indeed, notably the "Scene in the Meadows," opening and closing with lovely shepherd's — pipe solos by the woodwinds, and "March to the Scaffold," with the brasses massing behind Roger Voisin's brilliant trumpet.

The second half of the program consisted essentially of one mood, sustained completely through two works; Debussey's La Mer and Ravel's suite from the ballet Daphnis and Chloe.

Sunday — by G. G. V.

Charles Munch made the last appearance of his thirteen years as Musical Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on a perfect afternoon at Tanglewood.

The abbreviated curtain raiser was Aaron Copland's pleasant Quiet City.

By the time Dr. Munch got down to the main business of the day, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, every seat in the shed was full and a hush settled over the huge crowd, a hush that lasted to the very end of this long masterwork. Throughout the first three movements of the Ninth the orchestra played as one superlative instrument.

For the finale Baritone Soloist Donald Gramm filled the vastness of the Shed, Tenor John McCollum didn't and the two ladies, Adele Addison and Florence Kopleff performed adequately. The Festival Chorus, augmented by a group from the University of Montreal, was led by Fernand Graton and sang Dr. Munch's swan song with gusto.

This excellent concert was a fitting climax to the latest, though we hope not last phase in the career of a great interpretive artist. The ovation he received at the end was tremendous, and may, for all we know, still be going on as we write this.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

AUG 25 1962

Triumph for At Berkshire

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX — Pierre Monteux, making his final appearance at the 1962 Berkshire Festival, was hailed by an audience of 5822 in the Music Shed here at Tanglewood last night.

The applause was cumulative during the program of Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, the "Mathis der Maler" Symphony by Hindemith, and the C-minor Symphony of Brahms, and at the end burst into a full-scale ovation.

The 11,644 hands could not wait for the final C-major chord of Brahms to finish before the tumult began. Then the audience refused to let Monteux go. Five times the marvelous conductor, now 87, and still rotund, though he is reported to have lost 40 pounds, returned to smile and bow, bow and smile, signaled the orchestra to rise and to salute them with the prize-fighters' gesture of clasped hands.

Still the audience remained and stood clapping, cheering and whistling, until, at some imperceptible signal from back stage, the musicians were asked to leave. All this was in plain sight, but only some of us saw the salute Monteux received when he went through the door at intermission. There waiting to bestow the traditional French greeting of a kiss upon either cheek, was his colleague and friend, Dr. Charles Munch.

This is a concert of familiar, and according to my taste, great music. But nothing could have been more thrilling, in its way, than the classic proportions and the emotional sweep that Weber, Hindemith and Brahms received from this old master and a great orchestra determined to serve him and the composers at their best.

Monteux naturally spares himself physically; gestures are given only if necessary, and extreme emphasis but seldom, as required. The secret of such conducting is a technical skill and a remarkable memory—Monteux used no score during the concert—plus the mellow authority of a true master.

Added to these qualities is the marvelous simplicity of old age—something that youth seldom understands and almost never achieves.

This week-end marks not only the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, but the actual farewell of Dr. Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony. Saturday night and Sunday afternoon he will perform some of the music which he has conducted so notably at Symphony Hall and elsewhere over the past 13 years. These occasions promise to be full of emotions.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

AUG 27 1962

Monteux Opens Final Week At Tanglewood Festival

By MAUD L. WELIN

The final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival opened at Tanglewood Friday night with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Weber, Hindemith and Brahms.

* * *

MONTEUX' DELICATE, precise direction seemed particularly eloquent in the opening Overture to "Euranthe," by Carl Maria von Weber. The romantic mood of the work was given full expression throughout, the melodic line accorded sentient, but never sentimental expression. From the first announcement by woodwinds, through brilliant passages for full orchestra and a charming tutti-full of color, the performance was sheer delight.

Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," which followed, has to do with three religious pictures by Mathas Grunewald, 16th century German painter, whom Hindemith made the central figure of his opera of the same title. The symphony's three movements, "Angelis Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony," are identified with three paintings by Grunewald of the Isenheim Altar piece to be seen in the Museum at Colmar, Alsace.

* * *

ALTHOUGH THERE are sensitive and delicate gradations of color in the first movement, as the work progresses there is an exciting propulsiveness to Hindemith's bizarre combinations of sound which is almost unbearable.

In the second movement the horns take up the theme with rebellious, sad intensity, as the music sharply soars to lonely heights, then concludes with the violins offering chords of comforting harmonic beauty and an interplay between the strings and [illegible] of symphonical interest, the latter forming a sort of tutti accompaniment. The conductor's sense of musical proportion and authority was never more evident than in the dynamic passages of the concluding movement. In the "Temptation" the music works up to a climax where demons appear to torment the saint . . . and the audience too, judging by the rapt, almost strained attention accorded the orchestra.

* * *

THE SYMPHONY No. 1 in C minor by Johannes Brahms, with its definitely stated themes and recurring melodic emphasis, was a happy choice for the concluding number. Clarity and precision marked the agitated and somewhat melancholy introduction. Among memorable moments was the long decrescendo, leading up to the passage which begins almost in a whisper and is developed by degrees to a tremendous fortissimo. A continual delight was the opportunity offered for enjoyment of special sections of the orchestra . . . a theme taken by the strings, later reappearing for the oboe, with response by the clarinet and accompaniment of staccato chords for the violins and violas, and later, a melody divided as a solo between violin and flute.

It was good to leave Tanglewood with the magic of symphony's Finale uppermost in the mind. In this Brahms reiterates the harmonies of the preceding movements, but the moods of dark mystery and passion are succeeded by a joyousness as the tempo is accelerated and the key changed to C major. The resulting spirit of buoyancy and contentment was superbly captured by the orchestra.

* * *

THIS WAS Monteux' fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. He was recalled again and again at the conclusion of the concert, with cries of "Bravo Monteux," from an audience loathe to let him go.

There is a sadness to the ending the season at Tanglewood. There's a preciousness there that one never finds elsewhere — so many young music students walking about the grounds, congregating in the music shop, grouping about the piano in the glass lobby, completely engrossed in earnest conversation, endlessly discussing their art. But the nights are getting cold in the Berkshire Hills and it is certain that the orchestra will return another year.

Friday's concert had a near capacity audience, 5,285, and before the music began it was known that every seat in the shed, capacity 6,000, was taken for the weekend.

REVIEWS 8TH WEEK. 437

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Music Review

Monteux at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST concert of the final three of the season at Tanglewood brought Pierre Monteux as guest conductor to the podium for his fourth and last appearance of the summer. The venerable leader was recalled with ever-increasing enthusiasm at the conclusion of his program, and the members of the orchestra joined in the triumphal demonstration as heartily as the audience of over 5,200.

Monteux expressed his appreciation to the orchestra for their magnificent performance as much as to the audience for their homage and on one recall, embraced and bussed Concertmaster Richard Burgin on both cheeks a la Francaise in a gesture of which the touching import may not have been apparent to all. It was during the incumbency of Monteux at the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that Burgin originally took his post as principal first violinist and this was the last time that Burgin would occupy that chair under the baton of Monteux.

* * *

THE EVENING was bright and fresh and wraps were not superfluous, but it was bracing air for the orchestra and they never sounded better. The overture to "Euryanthe" of Weber opened the program and proceeded to the Hindemith symphony "Mathis der Maler." The circumstances of the composition of this work reveal the significance of the choice of the subject. It was in 1934 in Germany that Hindemith, living in one of the towers in the wall around Frankfort, was moved by the political atmosphere of the day to take the example of the Mathias Grunewald, a painter who lived in the time of the Reformation and who gave up his painting and joined in the struggle to free the oppressed peasants. The three movements are excerpts from an opera which was completed after the symphony and whose subtitles reveal the subject Hindemith was trying to express: "Angelic Concert," a short bridge slow movement, the "Entombment," and the "The Temptation of Saint Anthony."

* * *

THIS LAST movement was a tour de force. The strings have a very free cadenza introduction for 18 bars before the body of the movement is reached. This is written in the lower and most resonant areas of the instruments and remains there until the winds join in, at which time Hindemith moves them up where they still can emerge and hold their dominance.

The last half of the evening was devoted to the Brahms first, which has been heard from the Tanglewood stage by the Boston Orchestra under Koussevitzky, Carl Schuricht, Munch and Monteux. Monteux, by a skillful use of technic which does not allow a change of pace to become noticeable, keeps an urgency and forward tension to the first movement and keeps it consistently absorbing. The slow movement is one of the most lovely subjects in music, a heartfelt song which Monteux allowed his violins to utter with all the ample fervor at their command. The violin solos were done by Burgin with outstanding effectiveness.

* * *

BECAUSE OF the lengthened season this year, it was found expedient to call upon the veteran Monteux more than the previous years had offered opportunities. In any weighing of the efficacy of the altered schedule, the more frequent presence of Monteux must certainly be weighed on the favorable side.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 30 1962

Tanglewood Reviews

Friday — by K. P. M.

Pierre Monteux's last Tanglewood appearance of this season as a guest conductor last Friday evening marked the presentation of one of the most magnificent concerts of a very fine summer. From the opening Overture to Euryanthe by Weber, the careful musical preparation taken by Mr. Monteux was marvelously evident.

Hindemith's Symphony Mathis der Maler (Matthias the Painter) should have been heard by anyone who does not believe that the twentieth century has produced beautiful music. The soaring flute passages which dominate the first two movements ("Angelic Concert" and "Entombment") were played with exceptional clarity and control, while the last movement ("Temptation of Saint Anthony") showed an integration of sound which is more often hoped for than found in symphonic performances.

The crowning glory of the evening came, appropriately, at the end when Brahms' Symphony #1 was given a genuinely inspired performance.

Saturday — by E. M.

Dr. Munch excited an overflow audience Saturday night with a program of the French romantic music he admires so much and does so well. The first selection was Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony — a sprawling amalgam of program music which requires virtuoso conducting lest it lose continuity. All five selections were well done indeed, notably the "Scene in the Meadows," opening and closing with lovely shepherd's — pipe solos by the woodwinds, and "March to the Scaffold," with the brasses massing behind Roger Voisin's brilliant trumpet.

The second half of the program consisted essentially of one mood, sustained completely through two works, Debussey's La Mer and Ravel's suite from the ballet Daphnis and Chloe.

Sunday — by G. G. V.

Charles Munch made the last appearance of his thirteen years as Musical Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on a perfect afternoon at Tanglewood.

The abbreviated curtain raiser was Aaron Copland's pleasant Quiet City.

By the time Dr. Munch got down to the main business of the day, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, every seat in the shed was full and a hush settled over the huge crowd, a hush that lasted to the very end of this long masterwork. Throughout the first three movements of the Ninth the orchestra played as one superlative instrument.

For the finale Baritone Soloist Donald Gramm filled the vastness of the Shed, Tenor John McCollum didn't, and the two ladies, Adele Addison and Florence Kopleff performed adequately. The Festival Chorus, augmented by a group from the University of Montreal, was led by Fernand Graton and sang Dr. Munch's swan song with gusto.

This excellent concert was a fitting climax to the latest, though we hope not last phase in the career of a great interpretive artist. The ovation he received at the end was tremendous, and may, for all we know, still be going on as we write this.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
AUG 25 1962

Triumph for At Berkshire

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX — Pierre Monteux, making his final appearance at the 1962 Berkshire Festival, was hailed by an audience of 5822 in the Music Shed here at Tanglewood last night.

The applause was cumulative during the program of Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, the "Mathis der Maler" Symphony by Hindemith, and the C-minor Symphony of Brahms, and at the end burst into a full-scale ovation.

The 11,644 hands could not wait for the final C-major chord of Brahms to finish before the tumult began. Then the audience refused to let Monteux go. Five times the marvelous conductor, now 87, and still rotund, though he is reported to have lost 40 pounds, returned to smile and bow, bow and smile, signaled the orchestra to rise and to salute them with the prize-fighters' gesture of clasped hands.

Still the audience remained and stood clapping, cheering and whistling, until, at some imperceptible signal from back stage, the musicians were asked to leave. All this was in plain sight, but only some of us saw the salute Monteux received when he went through the door at intermission. There, waiting to bestow the traditional French greeting of a kiss upon either cheek, was his colleague and friend, Dr. Charles Munch.

This is a concert of familiar, and according to my taste, great music. But nothing could have been more thrilling, in its way, than the classic proportions and the emotional sweep that Weber, Hindemith and Brahms received from this old master and a great orchestra determined to serve him and the composers at their best.

Monteux naturally spares himself physically; gestures are given only if necessary, and extreme emphasis but seldom, as required. The secret of such conducting is a technical skill and a remarkable memory—Monteux used no score during the concert—plus the mellow authority of a true master.

Added to these qualities is the marvelous simplicity of old age—something that youth seldom understands and almost never achieves.

This week-end marks not only the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, but the actual farewell of Dr. Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony. Saturday night and Sunday afternoon he will perform some of the music which he has conducted so notably at Symphony Hall and elsewhere over the past 13 years. These occasions promise to be full of emotions.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
AUG 27 1962

Monteux Opens Final Week At Tanglewood Festival

By MAUD L. WELIN

The final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival opened at Tanglewood Friday night with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Weber, Hindemith and Brahms.

* * *

MONTEUX' DELICATE, precise direction seemed particularly eloquent in the opening Overture to "Euranthe," by Carl Marie von Weber. The romantic mood of the work was given full expression throughout, the melodic line recorded sentient, but never sentimental expression. From the first announcement by woodwinds, through brilliant passages for full orchestra and a charming tutti-full of color, the performance was sheer delight.

Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," which followed, has to do with three religious pictures by Mathes Grunewald, 16th century German painter, whom Hindemith made the central figure of his opera of the same title. The symphony's three movements, "Angelic Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony," are identified with three paintings by Grunewald of the Isenheim Altar piece to be seen in the Museum at Colmar, Alsace.

* * *

ALTHOUGH THERE are sensitive and delicate gradations of color in the first movement, as the work progresses there is an exciting propulsiveness to Hindemith's bizarre combinations of sound which is almost unbearable.

In the second movement the horns take up the theme with rebellious, sad intensity, as the music sharply soars to lonely heights, then concludes with the violins offering chords of comforting harmonic beauty and an interplay between the strings and latter forming a sort of tutti accompaniment. The conductor's sense of musical proportion and authority was never more evident than in the dynamic passages of the concluding movement. In the "Temptation" the music works up to a climax where demons appear to torment the saint . . . and the audience too, judging by the rapt, almost strained attention accorded the orchestra.

* * *

THE SYMPHONY No. 1 in C minor by Johannes Brahms, with its definitely stated themes and recurring melodic emphasis, was a happy choice for the concluding number. Clarity and precision marked the agitated and somewhat melancholy introduction. Among memorable moments was the long decrescendo, leading up to the passage which begins almost in a whisper and is developed by degrees to a tremendous fortissimo. A continual delight was the opportunity offered for enjoyment of special sections of the orchestra . . . a theme taken by the strings, later reappearing for the oboe, with response by the clarinet, and accompaniment of staccato chords for the violins and violas, and later, a melody divided as a solo between violin and flute.

It was good to leave Tanglewood with the magic of symphony's Finale uppermost in the mind. In this Brahms reiterates the harmonies of the preceding movements, but the moods of dark mystery and passion are succeeded by a joyousness as the tempo is accelerated and the key changed to C major. The resulting spirit of buoyancy and contentment was superbly captured by the orchestra.

* * *

THIS WAS Monteux' fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. He was recalled again and again at the conclusion of the concert, with cries of "Bravo Monteux," from an audience loathe to let him go.

There is a sadness to the ending the season at Tanglewood. There's a preciousness there that one never finds elsewhere — so many young music students walking about the grounds, congregating in the music shop, grouping about the piano in the glass lobby, completely engrossed in earnest conversation, endlessly discussing their art. But the nights are getting cold in the Berkshire Hills and it is certain that the orchestra will return another year.

Friday's concert had a near capacity audience, 5,238, and before the music began it was known that every seat in the shed, capacity 6,000, was taken for the weekend.

138

Monteux Opens Final Week At Tanglewood Festival

By MAUD L. WELIN

The final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival opened at Tanglewood Friday night with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Weber, Hindemith and Brahms.

* * *

MONTEUX' DELICATE, precise direction seemed particularly eloquent in the opening Overture to "Euranthe," by Carl Maria von Weber. The romantic mood of the work was given full expression throughout, the melodic line accorded sentient, but never sentimental expression. From the first announcement by woodwinds, through brilliant passages for full orchestra and a charming tuttifull of color, the performance was sheer delight.

Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," which followed, has to do with three religious pictures by Mathas Grunewald, 16th century German painter, whom Hindemith made the central figure of his opera of the same title. The symphony's three movements, "Angelis Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony," are identified with three paintings by Grunewald of the Isenheim Altar piece to be seen in the Museum at Colmar, Alsace.

* * *

ALTHOUGH THERE are sensitive and delicate gradations of color in the first movement, as the work progresses there is an exciting propulsiveness to Hindemith's bizarre combinations of sound which is almost unbearable.

In the second movement the horns take up the theme with rebellious, sad intensity, as the music sharply soars to lonely heights, then concludes with the violins offering chords of comforting harmonic beauty and an interplay between the strings and drums of exceptional interest, the latter forming a sort of tutti accompaniment. The conductor's sense of musical proportion and authority was never more evident than in the dynamic passages of the concluding movement. In the "Temptation" the music works up to a climax where demons appear to torment the saint . . . and the audience too, judging by the rapt, almost strained attention accorded the orchestra.

* * *

THE SYMPHONY No. 1 in C minor by Johannes Brahms, with its definitely stated themes and recurring melodic emphasis, was a happy choice for the concluding number. Clarity and precision marked the agitated and somewhat melancholy introduction. Among memorable moments was the long decrescendo, leading up to the passage which begins almost in a whisper and is developed by degrees to a tremendous fortissimo. A continual delight was the opportunity offered for enjoyment of special sections of the orchestra . . . a theme taken by the strings, later reappearing for the oboe, with response by the clarinet and accompaniment of staccato chords for the violins and violas, and later a melody divided as a solo between violin and flute.

It was good to leave Tanglewood with the magic of symphony's Finale uppermost in the mind. In this Brahms reiterates the harmonies of the preceding movements, but the moods of dark mystery and passion are succeeded by a joyousness as the tempo is accelerated and the key changed to C major. The resulting spirit of buoyancy and contentment was superbly captured by the orchestra.

* * *

THIS WAS Monteux' fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. He was recalled again and again at the conclusion of the concert, with cries of "Bravo Monteux," from an audience loathe to let him go.

There is a sadness to the ending the season at Tanglewood. There's a preciousness there that one never finds elsewhere — so many young music students walking about the grounds, congregating in the music shop, grouping about the piano in the glass lobby, completely engrossed in earnest conversation, endlessly discussing their art. But the nights are getting cold in the Berkshire Hills and it is certain that the orchestra will return another year.

Friday's concert had a near capacity audience, 5,288, and before the music began it was known that every seat in the shed capacity 6,080, was taken for the weekend.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

AUG 26 1962

CROWD OF 10,336 APPLAUDS MUNCH AT TANGLEWOOD

He Is Called Back Many Times After Leading Berlioz Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Charles Munch, who retires as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today, offered one of his greatest interpretations Saturday night to an audience estimated at 10,336, one of the largest of the season.

Storm of Applause

Naturally, it was this performance of Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique" that evoked such a storm of applause and bravos that Dr. Munch was forced to return to the stage at least a dozen times.

This has seldom happened in our memory of shed performances. It was a richly deserved ovation for a performance so broad in scope, so taut in style, that not a moment of its horrendous message was lost.

This symphony is a gigantic poem of love, hate and renunciation. It is also a powerful lesson on the evils of drug addiction; and proof of the phrase among them.

(See CROWD OF 10,336)
(Page 11-A)

Adding lustre to this program, Munch included his famous reading of "La Mer" by Debussy and concluded the program with that great tone poem for the dance, "Daphne and Chloe" by Ravel.

Serene Beauty

I find it difficult to find words to describe the impact of "La Mer." Its serene beauty and inner strength give one a feeling of unreality, even though the play of the waters can always be heard and the tiny storms which arise are as persuasive as though they were hurricanes.

The Boston Symphony players have learned to match tones to this music so that there is always a variety of color, color so beautiful it seems almost unreal.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 by Ravel is something else again. It was made for the ballet, and its rhythms and melodies fit exactly into place

Tale of Love

The work was premiered by Pierre Monteux. Its story follows a familiar pattern in that it is the oldest of countless tales of the love, tribulation and final union of a shepherd and shepherdess.

George Thornley, in his translation, commends the author as "a most sweet and pleasant writer," and calls the tale "a perpetual oblation to love: an everlasting anathema, sacred to Pan, and the nymphs"; and "a delightful possession even for all."

With what has been written we heartily agree, but it takes a special magic distillation to uncover its beauties, and that, Munch had at his command.

Hard to Forget

This has been a concert that will be very hard to forget or to duplicate. The best of the conductor went into it, and that best is so fine grained, sensitive and alert to beauty that the only way I expect to hear its equal will be for Munch to return and do it all over again.

The audience Saturday night was tense, ready to be emotional at the drop of a hat, and if the applause was a bit frenetic there was ample excuse.

It was a solid, well-earned ovation from those who sensed it might be their last opportunity to offer it again.

Munch was visibly moved by the demonstration and well it might be.

10,000 Cheer Munch Finale With Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 26 (UPI) — Charles Munch conducted a rousing reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony today to conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An enthusiastic crowd of about 10,000 cheered the gray-haired conductor who smilingly accepted their applause and returned again and again to stage center of the huge music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the longest Berkshire music festival and marked the end of the second-longest tenure of conducting with the Boston Symphony. Only Serge Koussevitzky, who was conductor 25 years, exceeded Munch's career in Boston.

Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrived in Boston from Europe yesterday and will begin rehearsals Sept. 17 to open his first season Sept. 21. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera and other groups.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 26,195

AUG 27 1962

Munch Gets Long Ovation After Final Appearance

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10 - minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954

AUG 27 1962

Conductor Munch Given Ovation In Last Appearance

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10 - minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE-TRIBUNE
D. 40,890

AUG 27 1962

Munch Gives Final Concert

LENOX (UPI)—Charles Munch conducted a rousing reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony Sunday to conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An enthusiastic crowd of about 10,000 cheered the gray-haired conductor who smilingly accepted their applause and returned again and again to stage center of the huge music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the longest Berkshire Music Festival and marked the end of the second-longest tenure of conducting with the Boston Symphony. Only Serge Koussevitsky, who was conductor 25 years, exceeded Munch's career in Boston.

Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrived in Boston from Europe Saturday and will begin rehearsals Sept. 17 to open his first season Sept. 21. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera and other groups.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

138

Monteux Opens Final Week At Tanglewood Festival

By MAUD L. WELIN

The final week of the 1962 Berkshire Festival opened at Tanglewood Friday night with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Weber, Hindemith and Brahms.

* * *

MONTEUX' DELICATE, precise direction seemed particularly eloquent in the opening Overture to "Euranthe," by Carl Maria von Weber. The romantic mood of the work was given full expression throughout, the melodic line accorded sentient, but never sentimental expression. From the first announcement by woodwinds, through brilliant passages for full orchestra and a charming tutti-full of color, the performance was sheer delight.

Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," which followed, has to do with three religious pictures by Mathas Grunewald, 16th century German painter, whom Hindemith made the central figure of his opera of the same title. The symphony's three movements, "Angelis Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony," are identified with three paintings by Grunewald of the Isenheim Altar piece to be seen in the Museum at Colmar, Alsace.

* * *

ALTHOUGH THERE are sensitive and delicate gradations of color in the first movement, as the work progresses there is an exciting propulsiveness to Hindemith's bizarre combinations of sound which is almost unbearable.

In the second movement the horns take up the theme with rebellious, sad intensity, as the music sharply soars to lonely heights, then concludes with the violins offering chords of comforting harmonic beauty and an interplay between the strings and drums of exceptional interest, the latter forming a sort of tutti accompaniment. The conductor's sense of musical proportion and authority was never more evident than in the dynamic passages of the concluding movement. In the "Temptation" the music works up to a climax where demons appear to torment the saint . . . and the audience too, judging by the rapt, almost strained attention accorded the orchestra.

* * *

THE SYMPHONY No. 1 in C minor by Johannes Brahms, with its definitely stated themes and recurring melodic emphasis, was a happy choice for the concluding number. Clarity and precision marked the agitated and somewhat melancholy introduction. Among memorable moments was the long decrescendo, leading up to the passage which begins almost in a whisper and is developed by degrees to a tremendous fortissimo. A continual delight was the opportunity offered for enjoyment of special sections of the orchestra . . . a theme taken by the strings, later reappearing for the oboe, with response by the clarinet and accompaniment of staccato chords for the violins and violas, and later, a melody divided as a solo between violin and flute.

It was good to leave Tanglewood with the magic of symphony's Finale uppermost in the mind. In this Brahms reiterates the harmonies of the preceding movements, but the moods of dark mystery and passion are succeeded by a joyousness as the tempo is accelerated and the key changed to C major. The resulting spirit of buoyancy and contentment was superbly captured by the orchestra.

* * *

THIS WAS Monteux' fourth appearance at Tanglewood this season. He was recalled again and again at the conclusion of the concert, with cries of "Bravo Monteux," from an audience loathe to let him go.

There is a sadness to the ending the season at Tanglewood. There's a preciousness there that one never finds elsewhere — so many young music students walking about the grounds, congregating in the music shop, grouping about the piano in the glass lobby, completely engrossed in earnest conversation, endlessly discussing their art. But the nights are getting cold in the Berkshire Hills and it is certain that the orchestra will return another year.

Friday's concert had a near capacity audience, 5,288, and before the music began it was known that every seat in the shed, capacity 6,080, was taken for the weekend.

10,000 Cheer Munch Finale With Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 26 (UPI) — Charles Munch conducted a rousing reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony today to conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

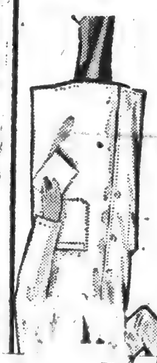
An enthusiastic crowd of about 10,000 cheered the gray-haired conductor who smilingly accepted their applause and returned again and again to stage center of the huge music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the longest Berkshire music festival and marked the end of the second-longest tenure of conducting with the Boston Symphony. Only Serge Koussevitzky, who was conductor 25 years, exceeded Munch's career in Boston.

Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrived in Boston from Europe yesterday and will begin rehearsals Sept. 17 to open his first season Sept. 21. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera and other groups.

...FORM CENTER

...State at the clock



$5.95

$8.95

$7.95

E...midst of the most torr... one lovely tune brou... back memories of the beloved and the protagonist calmed down. Over and over again this time recurs in numerous guises, and its effect is always the same.

Personally, I think this work ought to be done on Halloween. It has all the elements needed for a real celebration, and each phrase seems molded to emphasize its horrid episode.

We have never seen Munch conduct with greater intensity. He summoned tremendous climaxes and then offset them with phrases so tender and sweet that they brought a lump to the throat of this listener.

Master Technician

Berlioz, master technician, used every device to put over his point, and the result is a gigantic frame inside of which sounds of every conceivable color and ugliness may be heard. Surely this is great tone painting.

Munch is justly famous for his reading of the great, great work which has eluded so many others. He has delved deeply into the score and found within it treasures which may never again be duplicated, and these he has passed on to thousands of listeners who regard this reading as one of the greatest to be heard. We are among them.

Adding lustre to this program, Munch included his famous reading of "La Mer" by Debussy and concluded the program with that great tone poem for the dance, "Daphne and Chloe" by Ravel.

Serene Beauty

I find it difficult to find words to describe the impact of "La Mer." Its serene beauty and inner strength give one a feeling of unreality, even though the play of the waters can always be heard and the tiny storms which arise are as persuasive as though they were hurricanes.

The Boston Symphony players have learned to match tones to this music so that there is always a variety of color, color so beautiful it seems almost unreal.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 by Ravel is something else again. It was made for the ballet, and its rhythms and melodies fit exactly into place

Tale of Love

The work was premiered by Pierre Monteux. Its story follows a familiar pattern in that it is the oldest of countless tales of the love, tribulation and final union of a shepherd and shepherdess.

George Thornley, in his translation, commends the author as "a most sweet and pleasant writer," and calls the tale "a perpetual oblation to love: an everlasting anathema, sacred to Pan, and the nymphs"; and "a delightful possession even for all."

With what has been written we heartily agree, but it takes a special magic distillation to uncover its beauties, and that, Munch had at his command.

Hard to Forget

This has been a concert that will be very hard to forget or to duplicate. The best of the conductor went into it, and that best is so fine grained, sensitive and alert to beauty that the only way I expect to hear its equal will be for Munch to return and do it all over again.

The audience Saturday night was tense, ready to be emotional at the drop of a hat, and if the applause was a bit frenetic there was ample excuse.

It was a solid, well-earned ovation from those who sensed it might be their last opportunity to offer it again.

Munch was visibly moved by the demonstration and well he might be.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 26,195
AUG 27 1962

Munch Gets Long Ovation After Final Appearance

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10 - minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954

AUG 27 1962

Conductor Munch Given Ovation In Last Appearance

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10 - minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE-TRIBUNE
D. 40,890

AUG 27 1962

Munch Gives Final Concert

LENOX (UPI)—Charles Munch conducted a rousing reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony Sunday to conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An enthusiastic crowd of about 10,000 cheered the gray-haired conductor who smilingly accepted their applause and returned again and again to stage center of the huge music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the longest Berkshire Music Festival and marked the end of the second-longest tenure of conducting with the Boston Symphony. Only Serge Koussevitsky, who was conductor 25 years, exceeded Munch's career in Boston.

Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrived in Boston from Europe Saturday and will begin rehearsals Sept. 17 to open his first season Sept. 21. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera and other groups.

The New York T...
D. 880,265 S. 1,300...

AUG 27 1962

Music: Ber...

Charles Munch look...

Munch's Last ... of Boston S...

LENOX, Mass. ... The 1962 T... Festival came ... afternoon, and ... an era for the B... phony Orches... sion was the ... ance of Charles ... conductor, a ... for thirteen ye...

Mr. Munch ha... great affection of ... and of the crowd... summer come to ... for the festival. He ... receiving tributes ... tions from ... the beginning ... tra's season ... it was learned ... leaving.

His farewell ... Boston and ... past spring ... experiences. ... cheers and ... the conduc... come from ... audience, if ... its size—15...

The cheer... city each ... came out fo... end of the ... laurel wreath ... the orchestra ... the center of ... the ribbon ... scription: "... With Thank...

As is his ... ductor made ... allowed non... viously mov...

ence reactio... would have ... nitum if th... not broken ... tion by wall...

Despite ... dience was ... ing. Two co... Munch in 1... drawn larg... and 15,600. ... ance for th... the 1962 fe... imately 21... to 210,400 ... last year.

This af... primarily ... Ninth Sy... with wh... the sea... which h... other oct... wood fir...

The ... identical ... used ea... soprano ... contralto ... tenor, ... baritone ... of the B... pared b... son and ... Univers... rus di... Graton.

The s... by Aa... City."

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
AUG 27 1962 Buffalo

Music: Berkshire Finale

Charles Munch looking over scores in his study recently

Munch's Last Appearance as Conductor of Boston Symphony Ends Festival

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 26—The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival came to an end this afternoon, and with it ended an era for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The occasion was the final appearance of Charles Munch as its conductor, a post he has held for thirteen years.

Mr. Munch has won the great affection of Bostonians and of the crowds who each summer come to Tanglewood for the festival. He has been receiving tributes and ovations from audiences since the beginning of the orchestra's season last fall, when it was learned that he was leaving.

His farewell appearances in Boston and New York this past spring were emotional experiences. But the loudest cheers and applause to greet the conductor must have come from this afternoon's audience, if only because of its size—15,300 persons.

•

The cheers grew in intensity each time Mr. Munch came out for a bow at the end of the concert. A large laurel wreath, a tribute from the orchestra, was brought to the center of the stage. On its ribbon was the simple inscription: To Charles Munch with Thanks."

As is his custom, the conductor made no speeches and uttered none. But he was obviously moved by the audience reaction, which probably would have continued ad infinitum if the orchestra had not broken up the demonstration by walking off the stage.

Despite its size, the audience was not recordbreaking. Two concerts, led by Mr. Munch in 1951 and 1955 have drawn larger crowds—15,800 and 15,600. The total attendance for the eight weeks of the 1962 festival was approximately 217,500, as opposed to 210,400 for seven weeks last year.

•

This afternoon was devoted primarily to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the work with which Mr. Munch ended his season in Boston and which he had used on two other occasions for a Tanglewood finale.

The soloists were almost identical with those he had used earlier—Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. The chorus was that of the Berkshire Festival, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson and augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus directed by Fernand Graton.

The symphony was prefaced by Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," in which Roger Voisin was the trumpet soloist and Louis Speyer the English-horn soloist. The eight-minute work has particular significance to Tanglewood, for it was composed in a barn-studio two miles away.

For his penultimate concert last night, Mr. Munch repeated the program that had brought his New York appearances to an end last spring. This included Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé."

•

A master interpreter of these works, Mr. Munch understandably allowed himself some freedom in conducting the two final concerts. In the heightened tension of the week-end, he took tempos sometimes unusually fast, sometimes unusually slow. These might be exaggerations, if you will, but they added a wonderful excitement to the performances.

In the Boston Symphony he had an instrument responsive to every slightest nuance in his conducting. Mr. Munch never overtaxed the abilities of his extraordinary orchestra, but he drew from the seemingly impossible in virtuosity. The Berlioz symphony received a performance that was literally as well as figuratively stunning.

Yet the simple beauties of "Quiet City" (during which a passing plane reminded the listener how unquiet cities are) received their due. Mr. Munch whipped through the finale of Beethoven's Ninth, accenting the dramatic contrasts, but again the results were nerve-tingling.

•

Mr. Munch leaves for Europe tomorrow for a brief rest and a few guest appearances. The 70-year-old conductor, however, will be back in this country next season as guest conductor for four weeks with the Boston Symphony, as guest conductor of other American orchestras and as co-conductor of a tour by the Orchestre National of Paris.

When the Boston Symphony gathers for its first rehearsal on Sept. 17, it will have a new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. He will also be director of the 1963 Berkshire Festival, which will open on July 5 and continue for eight weeks, and of the 1963 Berkshire Music Center, which will be open from June 30 to Aug. 28.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
AUG 27 1962 Buffalo

15,300 Applaud Munch In Tanglewood Finale

By TED STRONGIN

By official count, exactly 15,300 cheering music lovers said goodbye to their dear, old friend, Charles Munch, yesterday at Tanglewood.

The concert marked the end of the tenure of Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which has made Tanglewood its world - renowned summer home.

By a singular coincidence, an audience of 15,300 had attended a concert with exactly the same program and soloists at the end of the 1957 season, also with Dr. Munch conducting: "Copland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony were the fare.

Yesterday's applause was tremendous for Dr. Munch. The bravoes were earth-shaking. Leaving aside considerations of sentimentality at parting, Dr. Munch's Ninth Symphony fully deserved the applause it generated. Fervent, fiery, extremely well-founded, yesterday's performance showed that at the moment of his retirement, Dr. Munch can rise to an occasion with powers emphatically undiminished.

For his soloists in the ninth, Dr. Munch had Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, baritone. They were superb. What counted most was the sweeping intensity of their spirit, rather than mere vocal accomplishments though these were all they should be.

Two organizations joined forces for the mighty final movement of the ninth. These were the chorus of the University of Montreal, directed by Fernand Graton and Tanglewood's own Berkshire Festival Chorus, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson.

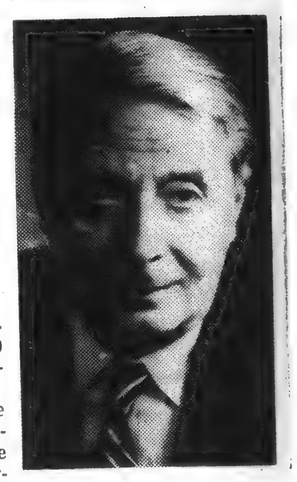
It would be difficult to communicate the ninth with more fervor, more exactness of emphasis, than the two choruses did in their joint effort.

Yesterday's was not the largest crowd ever, for Tanglewood. Mr. Munch drew 15,300 one day during the 1951 season and 15,600 in 1955.

In contrast, serge Koussevitzy's farewell in 1950 brought 12,600 to Tanglewood.

The shed and the lawn were bulging. All available parking space adjoining the grounds was filled. Cars overflowed into meadows across the street. Cars moved from nearby Lenox at a crawl. At 3:15 p. m., three quarters of an hour after the concert began, they were still bumper to bumper in downtown Lenox.

The lawns outside the shed was spread with the usual array of picnicers, folding chairs, blankets, newspaper readers, soft drink guzzlers.



Charles Munch

NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 27, 1962

Grand Finale at Tanglewood

Delirious Adieu to Retiring Charles Munch

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

When Alexander the Great, was said to have sighed because there were no more worlds to conquer, he predated his 20th century counterpart in the world of music, Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the podium at Tanglewood Friday night.

It was the consensus of 10,000 auditors who surged to the stage, that the beloved native of Alsace-Lorraine had reached the ultimate artistic plateau of his 13-year tenure as musical director of the Berkshire Music Festival.

At the conclusion of his all-French program: Berlioz, Debussy nd Ravel, in which the 100 men-and three women-honored their beloved conductor with a standing ovation, joined by every member of the audience, cries of 'Bravo', applause and whistles supplemented the usual dignified appreciation by the proper Bostonians.

"Here was music drama of a very high order, a demonstration of love and warm affection which required Mr. Munch to return for seven bows, only curtailed when the house lights were turned up and the orchestra began exiting.

It was a demonstration, unique in the 28-year annals of the Berkshire festival.

Saturday night's concert was directed by an equally-beloved Frenchman. Pierre Monteux, who offered an all-German program, incorporating works by von Weber, Hindemith and Brahms. Mr. Monteux was accorded one of his greatest receptions, following the Symphony, No. 1 by the immortal Teutonic composer.

In Conclusion

Yesterday's concluding concert was devoted to the traditional performance of Beethoven's ninth or "Choral Symphony, in which the orchestra was assisted by the combined choruses of the resident Festival ensemble and the University of Montreal choral group. The solo quartet each a favorite Tanglewood artist, consisted of Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCullom, tenor and Donald Gramm, baritone. The audience of 14,000 rose to honor the final appearance of Mr. Munch as conductor of the magnificent Bostonians.

When, in acknowledging the almost delirious reaction, following the exaltation of the "Ode to Joy," Beethoven's supreme and final effort in the wedding of instrumental and choral music, Mr. Munch placed his hand over his heart, as a gesture of his appreciation for the universal acceptance of his great art, engendering an involuntary flutter in the breasts of every member of the audience.

It was their "Vale" to a wonderfully modest human being, and one of the great orchestral conductors.

We are certain that every man, woman or child who has been exposed to the God-given talents of Mr. Munch, during his Tanglewood and Boston tenuers of office was offering up a silent prayer to the gods of Valhalla, that, when Mr. Munch finally hangs up his baton, that he will eventually be accorded a preferred position among the seats of the mighty.

140

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 14,786

AUG 27 1962

Music-Lovers Give Conductor Warm Farewell

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

* * *

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

Public dinners and a ball marked Portsmouth's celebration of the treaty of peace with Great Britain at the end of the Revolutionary War.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

AUG 27 1962

Long Ovation for Munch

LENOX, (AP)—An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank You." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012

AUG 27 1962

Munch Given Emotional Farewell

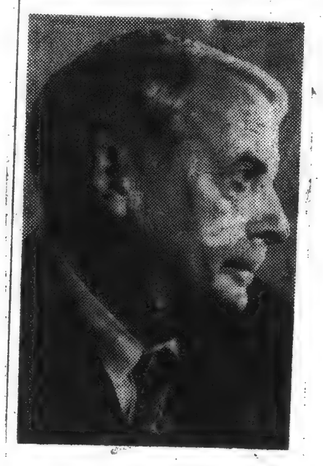
LENOX, Aug. 27 (AP)—An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood festival performance of the Beethoven 9th Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "to Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the Fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.



CHARLES MUNCH

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091

AUG 27 1962

15,300 Give 10 Min. Ovation To Chas. Munch

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108

AUG 27 1962

Tanglewood In Farewell To Munch

LENOX, Mass. (Special) — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony closed out another Berkshire Music Festival here at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

In so doing, Mr. Munch also brought to a close his dozen years as conductor of the famous orchestra.

Everything combined to give the Boston maestro a memorable sendoff. The upland Berkshire weather was superb. A near-record audience jammed the big Music Shed, the great green lawns, and about three counties' worth of parking space. And the chickadees and cicadas that will have the place to themselves from here in, made the most of this last symphonic occasion by joining in with the Festival chorus as it sang Schiller's Ode to Joy in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Ovation For Munch

The final moments of parting were surcharged with emotion. During the last movement of the Beethoven, the crowds on the lawn edged ever nearer the shed. And the last notes of the music had not ended before the roars of applause and cheers brought thunder to an otherwise sunny afternoon. Mr. Munch took bow after bow. The entire audience of 15,000 people was now standing, yelling and waving their programs over their heads. Mr. Munch took it all smiling and in silence. He has had innumerable ovations before. But this one he can paste in his scrapbook as probably the biggest and most heartfelt.

The whole afternoon had had a carnival air about it. In contrast to the sedate days when there was even some question whether gals in slacks should be allowed inside the Festival grounds, at least half the populace today came attired for the beach. Shorts, male and female, were seldom briefer. Bare feet were the new fashion note. Those who were not bowed down with picnic gear, were stooped under the weight of cameras. The crowds on the lawn were seldom still but eddied constantly all over the place. It became a question sometimes whether Beethoven or the rest rooms were the major attraction.

But those who settled down to hear, even if only now and then, heard a splendid concert. There was no doubt that for the Boston Symphony this was a special occasion. The musicians strove to make it historic not only in their performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" that opened the concert, but the Ninth Beethoven that closed it out. It was Mr. Munch swan-song, and it should have the best possible setting. It did.

Soloists Old Friends

The departing conductor had often finished the seasons here at Tanglewood with the Ninth Symphony. His interpretation is notably one of gusty joyousness and high lyricism, and so it was again on this final, festive afternoon. It is interesting to recall that when Mr. Munch had his first meeting with the orchestra 12 years ago he reportedly said "Gentlemen we shall make joy together." It was therefore not without a touch of special sentiment that today with the aid of Beethoven and Schiller, conductor and orchestra were still getting together joyously on this occasion of farewell.

Today's soloists were also old friends of Mr. Munch, the Boston Symphony and the public. Adele Addison was the soprano, Florence Kopleff the contralto, John McCollum tenor, and Donald Gramm bass. With the Festival Chorus was the University of Montreal Chorus, Fernand Gravton, director. It all added up to a brilliant and moving concert and nostalgic experience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,7[illegible]

AUG 27

Music:

By RAYMOND M[illegible]
Telegram Music C[illegible]

LENOX — Yesterday at Tanglewood Charles received a standing o[illegible] an audience of 15,30[illegible] concert after 13 ye[illegible] ductor of the Boston Orchestra. This was [illegible] cluding event of the [illegible]shire Music Festival [illegible]wood.

Ten solid minutes of [illegible]tic applause was [illegible] Richard Burgin, who [illegible] concertmaster of the B[illegible]phony after 42 years. [illegible] continue as associate [illegible] to Erich Leinsdorf, [illegible] cessor.

The weekend attend[illegible] 37,332, largest of the [illegible] festival. This summer's [illegible] tendance at Tanglewood [illegible] 290, with ticket sales [illegible] 894.50 as against the [illegible] dance (seven-week [illegible] 210,438 and receipts [illegible]

Augmented Ch[illegible]

An eight-week Ber[illegible] val, beginning July [illegible] nounced for 1963.

Saturday night's pro[illegible] yesterday's consisted [illegible] with which Munch [illegible] timately associated.

Saturday, he presen[illegible] French program of [illegible] bussy and Ravel.

Yesterday Munch [illegible] Aaron Copland's "Quie[illegible] Beethoven's Ninth Sym[illegible] the Beethoven, the fea[illegible] was prepared by [illegible] Patterson, new direc[illegible] Worcester Festival C[illegible] Berkshire chorus was [illegible] by the University [illegible] chorus, making a to[illegible] mixed voices.

Soloists were Ad[illegible] soprano; Florence [illegible] tralto; John McC[illegible] and Donald Gramm.

Contemporary [illegible]

These two works [illegible] bined at Tanglewood [illegible] the composer cond[illegible] City." Copland has [illegible] of absence this sum[illegible] Berkshire Music C[illegible] position department.

During his te[illegible] ton Symphony, Mr[illegible] sistently explo[illegible] music. It was [illegible] that prompted [illegible] "Quiet City" was [illegible] monumental Ninth [illegible]

The gentle, or[illegible] chords of "Quiet [illegible] established the [illegible] mood indicated by [illegible] important trumpet [illegible] horn solos were [illegible]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826

AUG 27 1962

Dr. Munch Ends 13-Year Career With Symphony

A number of Framingham residents were in the gathering of 15,300 music lovers at Tanglewood in Lenox yesterday afternoon as Dr. Charles Munch ended his 13-year career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was the final concert of the Berkshire Festival for the year. The performance was of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and received a tumultuous ovation.

The eight weeks season had an attendance of 217,290 persons. Total ticket sales were $546,894.50.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910

AUG 27 1962

Munch Closes His 13-Year Boston Symphony Career

Lenox, Mass. — (UPI) — Charles Munch conducted a rousing reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony yesterday to conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An enthusiastic crowd of about 10,000 cheered the gray-haired conductor who smilingly accepted their applause and returned again and again to center stage of the huge music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the longest Berkshire Music Festival and marked the end of the second-longest tenure of conducting with the Boston Symphony. Only Serge Koussevitzky, who was conductor 25 years, exceeded Munch's career in Boston.

Munch's successor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrived in Boston from Europe Saturday and will begin rehearsals Sept. 17 to open his first season Sept. 21. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera and other groups.

In his Boston tenure, Munch presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 58 United States premieres.

The Boston Symphony in 1956 became the first American orchestra to visit Russia. Munch also accompanied the Bostonians on tour to other European nations and the Far East.

Munch will return next season as guest conductor in Boston. He also will appear in Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington.

He will direct the French National Orchestra on its American tour in the fall and has guest conducting assignments in many European countries.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times-Argus (e)
BARRE, Vermont
Circ. 10,848

AUG 27 1962

French Conductor Munch Is Given Long Ovation

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

L'Independant
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 3,718

AUG 27 1962

M. Charles Munch ovationné aux nues

Lenox, Mass. — Aux acclamations délirantes d'une foule de 15,300 spectateurs, dans le décors des monts Berkshire, l'éminent chef d'orchestre français Charles Munch a dirigé la Symphonie de Boston pour la dernière fois. Le vaste auditoire lui a fait une ovation de 10 minutes après qu'il eut dirigé la Neuvième Symphonie de Ludwig Van Beethoven, symphonie dont les mouvements et le choeur exaltent la beauté, la force et les bienfaits de la jeunuesse.

Chaque apparition du sympathique maestro provoqua des salves d'applaudissements et pour couronner le tout, on lui présenta une énorme gerbe de fleurs portant l'inscription: "Charles Munch, Thank You!" — "Charles Munch, Merci à Vous!"

Tout au long de cette manifestation d'admiration, le tumulte joyeux dans l'assistance fut indescriptible.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703

Music: Munch Conducts His Final Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood, Charles Munch received a standing ovation from an audience of 15,301 at his final concert after 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This was the concluding event of the 25th Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Ten solid minutes of enthusiastic applause was shared by Richard Burgin, who retired as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony after 42 years. Burgin will continue as associate conductor to Erich Leinsdorf, Munch's successor.

The weekend attendance was 37,332, largest of the eight-week festival. This summer's total attendance at Tanglewood was 217,290, with ticket sales of $546,694.50 as against the 1962 attendance (seven-week festival) of 210,438 and receipts of $533,136.

Augmented Chorus

An eight-week Berkshire Festival, beginning July 5, is announced for 1963.

Saturday night's program and yesterday's consisted of music with which Munch has been intimately associated.

Saturday, he presented an all-French program of Berlioz, Debussy and Ravel.

Yesterday Munch conducted Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. For the Beethoven, the festival chorus was prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, new director of the Worcester Festival Chorus. The Berkshire chorus was augmented by the University of Montreal chorus, making a total of 150 mixed voices.

Soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone.

Contemporary Music

These two works were combined at Tanglewood in 1957, with the composer conducting "Quiet City." Copland has been on leave of absence this summer from the Berkshire Music Center's composition department.

During his tenure with the Boston Symphony, Munch has consistently exploited contemporary music. It was this factor alone that prompted him to associate "Quiet City" with Beethoven's monumental Ninth Symphony.

The gentle, opening mystical chords of "Quiet City," promptly established the prime, modal mood indicated by the title. The important trumpet and English horn solos were gorgeously played by Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer, who were stationed in front of the accompanying string orchestra.

CHARLES MUNCH
Last Performance

Both soloists were given extraordinary freedom by the conductor, relegating the other instruments to an accompanying function. These typically distended, folklorish melodies served to intensify the work's placid atmosphere. In the brief climax, strings produced sweeping phrases, after which Munch demonstrated marvelous control in refining the work to a hushed close.

The sharply rhythmic theme that launches the Beethoven Ninth heralded a memorable performance. There was highvoltage tension everywhere, even to four television cameramen who recorded the historic occasion. Attacks by the orchestra were incisive, resonant-plus. We've rarely heard the woodwinds play with such verve, almost to a point of strain.

In the scherzo movement, sound virtually crackled. It was heavy, percussive production, without an overflow of stridency. Except for a few slight blemishes, horns were full voiced and richly toned. The middle section of the movement, a trio, had spotless passages in the bassons.

Devout Soliloquy

The third movement was addressed as an expressive and devout soliloquy. The fragility achieved here was extraordinary compared with the sturdiness of the first two movements.

It was the choral - orchestral finale, however, based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," that touched off the tremendous roar of applause, with thousands of persons standing on their chairs and shouting.

The chorus sang as if their lives depended upon it. Voices were ushed in by cello and bass recitatives, crammed with warmth and resonance.

Power accumulated as the voices, singing in German, progressed from "Joy, Thou Spark from Heaven Immortal" to the men's chorus and tenor solo, "Brothers, Now Forget All Sadness," ending with the sweeping climax, "High, Beyond All Stars Adore Him."

Ecstatic Spirit

Except for a slight domination by the tenor, the solo quartet was well-balanced and attuned to the ecstatic spirit of the text.

Miss Addison unfailingly reached the high ringing tones, Miss Kopleff's beautiful voice was projected with warmth and clarity.

McCollum's tenor solo, "Glad as the Suns that God Sent Flying" had opulence and communication. Gramm initiated the choral portion of the finale with a resonant, tasteful recital of "Oh! Friends, No Longer These Tones of Sadness."

So ended a great festival and the services of conductor and concertmaster who have enjoyed the respect of a great orchestra and devoted public.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 27 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

15,300 Hail Munch In Farewell Role

By JOHN F. KYES

LENOX — The valedictory of Charles Munch after 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew 15,300 to Tanglewood yesterday, tying the record for a similar Sunday in 1957, and as far as I know being second only to the 15,800 attendance recorded in 1951.

The performance of Beethovens Ninth Symphony, long a favorite with Munch as a Berkshire Festival finale, evoked a friendly frenzy in which whole rows of the audience stood on their chairs to get a better farewell glimpse of the conductor.

In spite of its carnival atmosphere, with TV cameras and restless throngs everywhere, the afternoon had its high moments of musical worth. Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was an agreeable opener, with Louis Speyer's English horn and Roger Voisin's trumpet meaningly intoned against the background of strings.

Distinguished Singers

The famous symphony had the usual quartet of distinguished singers: Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum and Donald Gramm, all in good voice, though McCollum's tenor was being pushed to its limit of volume and Gramm's agreeable baritone could well be replaced with a voice of more booming bass resonance.

The work of the chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, was superb and at times stunning. Augmented by students from the University of Montreal, the group appeared to number nearly 200, and its impact was unflagging, true to pitch and highly satisfying. Broadly sustained phrases were especially compelling.

Like Fireworks

The orchestra played with devotion, and the fiery passages burst forth like fireworks. The singing movement of the symphony, the third, began with a lovely melody which might well serve as a parting hymn for Munch. The composer's sweet and long developments of other themes in this section created the only static moments of the hour-long symphony.

The audience was in the mood, even refraining from any applause whatsoever from the symphony's beginning till its end, a result devoutly to be wished, but so often missed in a mixed audience.

Now we shall see Munch only at rare intervals in Boston and at Tanglewood, as he devotes the interludes to rest and guest appearances all over the world.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Circ. 7,827
AUG 28 1962

Munch Receives Lengthy Ovation At Final Concert

LENOX, Mass. (AP) —An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation Sunday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old French conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank you." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
AUG 25 1962

15,300 Cheer Dr. Munch In Farewell

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS.—Dr. Charles Munch yesterday conducted his final concert as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years before one of the most enthusiastic audiences of 15,300 we have heard in all the many years of the Berkshire Festival.

The afternoon concert at Tanglewood marked not only the close of the current season of eight weeks attended by 217,290, but also the end of Dr. Munch's years as director.

It marked also the end of the long career of Richard Burgin as concert-master. It was in more ways than one a memorable and an historic afternoon that those present will long cherish and remember. It marks the end of an era for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the beginning of a new chapter under a new director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Despite the sadness of the leave-taking of the beloved Dr. Munch, who goes into retirement, the thousands of music lovers were comforted by the knowledge that he will be back as a guest conductor and that in retirement he will be active as guest conductor of orchestras from Japan, the Scandinavian Countries, France, and numerous American cities.

Old conductors (and we do not mean "old" as applied to Dr. Munch) do not, like old soldiers, "fade away." Instead they become even more active as conductors of other orchestras.

The audience gave Dr. Munch a standing ovation as he came upon the podium and by the time the concert was over they gave a farewell such as would warm the heart of any man. It was a perfect afternoon as though made to order by the weaterman.

Perfect For Listening

It was perfect for listening and the music of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" as presented by the Boston, the Festival Chorus and University of Montreal Chorus of more than 125 male and female voices and four soloists, will be remembered for years as one of the high spots, not only of this, but of many seasons at Tanglewood.

The third movement of the Ninth was especially beautiful. Dr. Munch gave such a splendid reading and conducted with such excellence that it may be a long time before we have its equal.

The four soloists, who have sung the same program in other years, gave a fine performance. They are: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone, all of whom won well-merited applause. Alfred Nash Patterson prepared the Festival Chorus and Fernand Graton directed the chorus from the University of Montreal.

This year's Berkshire Festival was extended to eight weeks and drew 217,290 listeners with Dr. Munch carrying on the heaviest part of the program though there were a number of guest conductors. The farewell concert for Serge Koussevitsky in 1950 drew 12,600. There have been three other concerts conducted by Dr Munch over the years when the audiences were larger or equal to that of yesterday.

Attendance for this final week was 37,322 with 5,288 present on Friday night for the concert conducted by 87-year-old Pierre Monteux and 10,336 present on Saturday night for the program of French composers conducted by Dr. Munch.

By [illegible]

For many years we have been writing about the magnificence of Dr. Munch's conducting of the French composers who have been his contemporaries and Saturday night's concert was one of his finest in this vein.

He conducted with such rich tonal painting that one will never forget his performance of Berloiz's "Fantastic Symphony," his reading of Debussy's "La Mer (The Sea)," nor the Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe."

Repeat Suggested

It was such a terrific performance that one would like to suggest to the management a repeat of the same program on an evening next season with Dr. Munch invited back as conductor.

Audiences over the weekend have been more than enthusiastic. They have come with an air of expectancy and gone away with every bit of it more than fulfilled. It has been a weekend of concerts beautifully performed, rich in variety, lustrous in color, and perfection of performance. Audiences applauded like mad on Saturday night, had Dr. Munch throwing them warm signs of affection from his heart, and yesterday afternoon's audience was even more enthusiastic.

During the 13 years Dr. Munch has been conducting concerts at Tanglewood it has been the pleasant task of this writer to record his activities for readers of The Republican and The American. This has been more than a pleasure on many occassions. It is with a note of some sadness that we see Dr. Munch leave the orchestra as director, but he goes with the good wishes of thousands. Speaking not only for ourselves but for the thousands of music lovers in Western Connecticut who have heard him conduct, we know we voice the good wishes of all to Dr. Munch when we borrow the words of Schiller's "Ode" from Sunday's performance and say: "Oh friends, no longer these tones of sadness. Rather sing a song of sharing and of gladness."

A huge green wreath was presented to Dr. Munch at the end of the performance which for the first time at Tanglewood was completely taped for later showing on an educational Tv series to be broadcast from Boston.

And as the last of the crowd was departing from the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, plans were announced for next year's Berkshire Festival series to open on July 5.

SM

142

30—Waterbury American, Monday, August 27, 1962

Dr. Munch Cheered At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS.—Dr. Charles Munch yesterday conducted his final concert as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years before one of the most enthusiastic audiences of 15,300 we have heard in all the many years of the Berkshire Festival.

The afternoon concert at Tanglewood marked not only the close of the current season of eight weeks attended by 217,290 but also the end of Dr. Munch's years as director.

It marked also the end of the long career of Richard Burgin as concert-master. It was in more ways than one a memorable and an historic afternoon that those present will long cherish and remember. It marks the end of an era for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the beginning of a new chapter under a new director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Despite the sadness of the leave-taking of the beloved Dr. Munch, who goes into retirement, the thousands of music lovers were comforted by the knowledge that he will be back as a guest conductor and that in retirement he will be active as guest conductor of orchestras from Japan, the Scandinavian Countries, France, and numerous American cities.

Old conductors (and we do not mean "old" as applied to Dr. Munch) do not, like old soldiers, "fade away." Instead they become even more active as conductors of other orchestras.

The audience gave Dr. Munch a standing ovation as he came upon the podium and by the time the concert was over they gave a farewell such as would warm the heart of any man. It was a perfect afternoon as though made to order by the weaterman.

Perfect For Listening

It was perfect for listening and the music of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" as presented by the Boston, the Festival Chorus and University of Montreal Chorus of more then 125 male and female voices and four soloists, will be remembered for years as one of the high spots, not only of this, but of many seasons at Tanglewood.

The third movement of the Ninth was especially beautiful. Dr. Munch gave such a splendid reading and conducted with such excellence that it may be a long time before we have its equal.

The four soloists, who have sung the same program in other years, gave a fine performance. They are: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone, all of whom won well-merited applause. Alfred Nash Patterson prepared the Festival Chorus and Fernand Graton directed the chorus from the University of Montreal.

This year's Berkshire Festival was extended to eight weeks and drew 217,290 listeners with Dr. Munch carrying on the heaviest part of the program though there were a number of guest conductors. The farewell concert for Serge Koussevitsky in 1950 drew 12,600. There have been three other concerts conducted by Dr. Munch over the years when the audiences were larger or equal to that of yesterday.

Attendance for this final week was 37,322 with 5,288 present on Friday night for the concert conducted by 87-year-old Pierre Monteux and 10,336 present on Saturday night for the program of French composers conducted by Dr. Munch.

For many years we have been writing about the magnificence of Dr. Munch's conducting of the French composers who have been his contemporaries and Saturday night's concert was one of his finest in this vein.

He conducted with such rich tonal painting that one will never forget his performance of Berloiz's "Fantastic Symphony," his reading of Debussy's "La Mer (The Sea)," nor the Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe."

Repeat Suggested

It was such a terrific performance that one would like to suggest to the management a repeat of the same program on an evening next season with Dr. Munch invited back as conductor.

Audiences over the weekend have been more than enthusiastic. They have come with an air of expectancy and gone away with every bit of it more than fulfilled. It has been a weekend of concerts beautifully performed, rich in variety, lustrous in color, and perfection of performance. Audiences applauded like mad on Saturday night, had Dr. Munch throwing them warm signs of affection from his heart, and yesterday afternoon's audience was even more enthusiastic.

A huge green wreath was presented to Dr. Munch at the end of the performance which for the first time at Tanglewood was completely taped for later showing on an educational Tv series to be broadcast from Boston.

And as the last of the crowd was departing from the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, plans were announced for next year's Berkshire Festival series to open on July 5.

SM

GREENVILLE, N.Y.
LOCAL
W. 500

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

AUG 29 1962

Munch Retires As BSO Music Director

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded the Orchestra's Eighty-first season and the Twenty-fifth Berkshire Festival Sunday with a performance of the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

Sunday's concert was Doctor Munch's last as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for thirteen years. During his tenure with the Orchestra, Doctor Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres.

In his thirteen years as Music Director, Charles Munch brought honor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Doctor Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the and Ravel's "Dahinis and Chloe". Orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe". The Orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Charles Munch extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present season of eight weeks bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts to 24. These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts in addition to Arthur Fiedler's 59 Pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50-week season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees and Eric Leinsdorf, who succeeds Doctor Munch as the Orchestra's Music Director in September, have invited Doctor Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the Orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge, and Providence. In addition to his concerts with this Orchestra, Doctor Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

In the autumn of 1962 Charles Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. Doctor Munch has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague, and Santander Festivals. He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the suicse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 27 1962

At Tanglewood

Munch, Monteux Conduct At Final Weekend Concerts

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

This weekend's farewell concerts of the Boston Symphony season at Tanglewood, programmed for varied music, provoked many mixed emotions. There were more farewells than could be taken glibly.

There was a feeling at Friday's concert, with Pierre Monteux conducting, that his duties at London, Hancock, Maine, where he teaches conducting to young probable musicians, plus a spirit that at 87 would still take him to other orchestras in other lands, left some doubt that the Berkshires might soon see him again. However, judging from the vigorous performance of Friday's concert, it would not likely be a matter of an arduous trip that might pin him down.

Standing Ovation

The vigor came, not only in Weber's "Eurythanthe" overture which was performed at the impetuous pace of a youngster, but in a lively and brightly colored "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith. The Brahms' first was produced with optimism that has been all too seldom in the fore. The audience, which had greeted Monteux on its feet, rose again to give him a long, hoarse, standing ovation when he had concluded this concert. When he embraced Richard Burgin, who had taken the position of concert-master while Monteux was the orchestra's director, the audience was again reminded that this was Burgin's last weekend as concert-master of the orchestra.

The remaining concerts of the weekend were completed by Munch, conducting works that no doubt have meant as much to him as to his audience. While the poetic Symphonie Fantastique program of the lovesick young musician who attempts to poison himself with opium over an Irish actress may produce giggles, it did produce music as fabulous as its title implies. Berlioz did, by the way, fall in love with an Irish actress named Harriet Smithson, and even married her, though he was thereafter miserable.

Munch performed the symphony as he best performs his best works. There was personal feeling as large as he could find opportunity in the performance to make it that way, and opportunities exist for Munch in this type of music and in the French impressionists more, it seems, than in any other. Hence, one may expect under Munch that Mozart or Haydn, for instance, would have no middle ground than very successful or very pedestrian.

The remaining works on Saturday's program, Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" are examples of music at which he not only succeeds but colors so highly one tends to lose sight of reality of the music in the moods and effects created.

Near Record

The weather forecaster had evidently not yet heard of Tanglewood's rain immunity and despite stormy predictions, there was a bright, warm sun and a near record audience of 15,300 for the last concert, Sunday. The rousing ovation that welcomed Munch to the podium was halted only by his deliberate motions to begin Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." This, again impressionistic work, written in 1939 for a play by Irwin Shaw scored for clarinet, saxophone and piano was, in 1940 in a barn-studio near Tanglewood, modified for strings, trumpet and English horn. The gentle dialogue of the two solo instruments played by Louis Speyer, English horn and Roger Voisin on a silver E-flat trumpet was not only hauntingly nostalgic of some remote Broadway night at 4 a.m. that most have experienced, but a realistic sense of incongruity as provocative as tomorrow. While the personal and intimate tones like catches of unconnected phrases were often triple pianissimos, they still gleamed brightly on the instruments like a steady nightlight that refused to go out.

The program was completed with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone, plus the Festival and University of Montreal choruses. Though Mr. McCollum's complicated tenor solo was made a bit more difficult by the almost unbridled orchestra, the soloists made a splendidly effective group. The chorus with more weight than mobility, still showed remarkable strength and spirit. Still the other movements are far better writting and the second movement with its brilliantly rhythmic and presto punch was a memorable performance in itself.

Call and Recall

The audience rose to its chairs for this ovation with call and recall to Munch of "No-No" to his retirement and "Bravos" to this and many other to-be-remembered concerts. Munch, rarely displaying emotion publicly, embraced Burgin, his concert-master and Jacobus Langenden, a cellist with the symphony, both of whom were to retire as well.

When finally they left the stage, it occurred to some that these two, Burgin and Munch, were rather equally responsible for the growth and preservation of the orchestra.

It perhaps doesn't necessarily occur to everyone that the position of an effective concert-master (and Mr. Burgin is considered probably the best) is no mere sinecure. The bowing, tempo, style and tone of the first violins is determined and guided by the strongest toned, most instrumentally and musically respected man in that group; in turn the prominent and more brilliant tones of the first violins not only set the pace and characteristics of the second violins, but of the violas, celli, and basses as well. Finally, any string section (and especially the world's most famous) so predominates in weight and influence over the other groups of today's romantically balanced orchestra, there is only a logical subservience by such winds and instruments as are left.

The concert-master is not only charged with these duties, but he must solo frequently as he did so well in Brahms Friday, but he must be able to conduct on short notice and perform myriad miracles for the conductor and orchestra that would make most men of strength weak.

Though these two retirements may sound like amputations of heart and soul to the orchestra, Mr. Burgin will be back as associate and Mr. Munch as guest conductor, we hope frequently. And though certainly with Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Sliverstein as new director and concert-master, we can expect change, it will no doubt be change of even greater accomplishment since the new character and personality such as is evidenced in their histories, however short, is but to be added to an already illustrious organization.

...S BUREAU
...N.Y.
...PLE
...ES

Munch Retires As BSO Music Director

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded the Orchestra's Eighty-first season and the Twenty-fifth Berkshire Festival Sunday with a performance of the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

Sunday's concert was Doctor Munch's last as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held for thirteen years. During his tenure with the Orchestra, Doctor Munch has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres, and 39 world premieres.

In his thirteen years as Music Director, Charles Munch brought honor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Doctor Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Awards for his recordings with the and Ravel's "Dahinis and Chloe". Orchestra of Debussy's "Images" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe". The Orchestra received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Charles Munch extended the Berkshire Festival from six weeks to its present season of eight weeks bringing the total of Berkshire Festival concerts to 24. These coupled with 81 concerts in Boston, 36 tour concerts in addition to Arthur Fiedler's 59 Pops concerts and 21 Esplanade concerts, enable the Boston Symphony to have the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world: 221 concerts in a 50-week season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees and Eric Leinsdorf, who succeeds Doctor Munch as the Orchestra's Music Director in September, have invited Doctor Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the Orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge, and Providence. In addition to his concerts with this Orchestra, Doctor Munch has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, National Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

In the autumn of 1962 Charles Munch will conduct the French National Orchestra on its tour of the United States. Doctor Munch has additional invitations to conduct at the Montreux, Vienna, Prague, and Santander Festivals. He has also been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestras of Radio Rome, Radio Turin, and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the suicse Romande, and to do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D: 551,529 S. 643,232

AUG 29 1962

A FAREWELL TO MUNCH

Special to The Sun-Times

LENOX, Mass. — An emotional farewell to Charles Munch was roared out by a crowd of 15,300 as the 71-year-old conductor brought his baton down for the last time on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" at the conclusion of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony here at Tanglewood. Thus ended Munch's 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival.

Herald
AUG 27 19

Tangl...

13 Y...

By Ronald...
Music ...

TANGLEWOO...

An emotional ... Charles Munch ... out by a crowd ... the 71-year-old ... brought his bato... the last time ... "Ode to Joy" at ... clusion of Beetho... Symphony here ... wood Sunday af... ending 13 years ... rector of the Bo... phony and 12 as m... ...r of the Berkshi...

The ovation, la... five minutes, wa... tumultuous sort n... monly heard in ... stadium. Cheering ... ers crowded aroun... of the platform... dreds of photograp... bulbs popped.

When a large la... was brought to the...

New York Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
AUG 27 1962 Buffalo

Tanglewood's Cheers Rival a Football Game

13 Years: Munch's Good By

By Ronald Eyer
Music Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.

An emotional farewell to Charles Munch was roared out by a crowd of 15,300 as the 71-year-old conductor brought his baton down for the last time on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" at the conclusion of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony here at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, thus ending 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival.

The ovation, lasting nearly five minutes, was of the tumultuous sort more commonly heard in a football stadium. Cheering well-wishers crowded around the front of the platforming as hundreds of photographer's flashbulbs popped.

When a large laurel wreath was brought to the stage, the white-haired maestro placed his hand to his heart and took final farewell of his orchestra by shaking hands with his concert-master, Richard Burgin, and Richard Langendoen, cellist, who also is retiring.

Charles Munch

Dr. Munch will be succeeded at the opening of the coming season by Erich Leinsdorf, most recently a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

The last two concerts of the Berkshire Festival, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, were conducted by Dr. Munch, and the programs consisted of music with which he has been most prominently identified during his tenure with the orchestra. The music lies close to his heart.

Saturday's program, appropriately all French (Dr. Munch is Alsatian by birth) offered Berlioz "Symphonie Fatastique," Debussy's Symphonic Sketches, "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2. Sunday, in addition to the Ninth Symphony, there was Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for string, trumpet and English horn.

With the spring of a man 30 years his junior in his step as he came to the podium, a clear impatience to get on with the music as the audience greeted him with a standing ovation, the conductor launched into the arduous Berlioz work with a vitality he has not often duplicated in recent years. The opening movement, "Reveries, Passions," was a bit tentative, but with the waltz movement and from there through "Scene in the Meadow," with its beautiful pastoral passages for English horn, "March to the Scaffold," and the eerie "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath," the work was pregnant with imagination. The evocation of its dramatic content, far from being just another reading, drew upon every resource of the orchestra.

"La Mer," one of the special properties of the Boston Symphony since the days of its late conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, brought forth all the opulence of tone and brilliance of color that characterize this orchestra at its best.

For the Beethoven Symphony, Dr. Munch had the services of the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, and the University of Montreal Chorus, of which Fernand Graton is director, and a quartet composed of Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone.

It was a truly festive performance with impressive thrust and drive, not only in the three instrumental movements, but in the soaring "ode" in which Beethoven joins Schiller to call for the brotherhood of all men under God. This was a summons of his own, perhaps, a parting word from yesterday's conductor to a world even farther removed than ever from the ideal of the poet and the musician.

Sensing the significance of the occasion, both the soloists and the chorus rose magnificently to the conductor's call for a grand finale. The chorus of young voices was very big, but Beethoven was calling upon the millions and the profusion of sound did not seem too much. The soloists gave everything they had to make the solo and quartet parts a match in grandeur to the chorus and orchestra.

The long, long thoughts of the Copland piece, extracted from music he wrote for Harold Clurman's play of the same name, were expressed in sensitive, nostalgic, and beautifully echoing, muted tones by Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn—both first-chair men in the orchestra.

The preceding Friday night's concert was conducted by Pierre Monteux, whose association with the Boston Symphony began two generations ago. A disappointingly small crowd heard his wondrously settled and serene performances of the Overture to "Euryanthe," Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis Der Maler," with mountainous facades from the Boston brass and reports from the percussion that echoed like pistol shots—and, finally, a suavely sensitive performance of Brahms' First Symphony.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR
D. 294,496

AUG 27 1962 Buffalo

SHOW BIZ

A crowd of more than 15,000 roared a five-minute ovation for Dr. Charles Munch at the end of his last performance with the Boston Symphony before his retirement. He has been music director of the symphony for 13 years.

AL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UFFALO EVENING NEWS
Monday, August 27, 1962

143

15,300 at Tanglewood Give Munch Big Tribute, Farewell

By JOHN DWYER
Buffalo News Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 27—A standing audience of 15,300 shouted and applauded, waved handkerchiefs and wept in an extraordinary tribute to conductor Charles Munch Sunday afternoon in the Berkshire Music Festival shed.

Dr. Munch's baton came to rest on the closing chord of the great Beethoven Ninth "Choral" Symphony, and with it he closed his 13-year directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA, in an unusually keyed-up and dramatic mood, the festival choir and singers of Montreal University, soprano Adele Addisson, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and bass Donald Gramm put their all into the monumental work.

Preceded by a sensitive reading of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," with its mystic horn and woodwind episodes, the Beethoven symphony seemed to have even more size and grandeur, in contrast with the allusive and impressionistic opening piece.

On any other occasion, with any other ensemble on stage, one might have quarreled with the reckless drive and rush of the scherzo and the pace of the choral finale.

* * *

BUT EVERYONE'S PULSE was running high on this occasion, a moving valedictory for a distinguished world musician. He will make guest appearances in the major music capitals, of course, and even return to Tanglewood for concerts. But with this concert, his directorship ceased and an era passed. It was an intense and touching moment.

The combined choruses shared the emotional charge and sang out the declamatory, joyous phrases of the Schiller "Ode to Joy" with unusual drive and rhythmic impact.

The quartet of soloists, given the most difficult, least singable roles in the whole Beethoven work, performed their ungrateful task with valor.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE extended itself in applause for the orchestra in its closing festival program, the chorus and soloists. But, in truth, their eyes and hearts were turned, first and last, to the quiet, introspective Alsatian maestro on the podium.

Dr. Munch came back again and again in company of the soloists, but the audience would not leave until he appeared also time and again on his own.

The gray, patrician conductor carried it off with great calm and charm. But oh his final, long walk from center stage to the side door; the handkerchief that had been gently patting his brow went to his eyes.

It was an historic chapter ending in the history of a great orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf will succeed Dr. Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 27 1962

Tanglewood

Audience Hails Munch Finale

By Louis Chapin
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch Sunday afternoon conducted his final program, at Tanglewood, after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony. This has been his 12th Berkshire Festival season.

An audience of over 15,000 filled the Music Shed and spread out over the acres of lawn stretching up to the tree-shaded center of the estate. They heard performances of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, for the closing movement of which the orchestra was joined by the choruses of the Berkshire Music Center and the University of Montreal.

Accolades Earned

The quartet of soloists consisted of Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone.

Judging by their close attention and the 12-minute ovation which greeted the final whiplash cadences of the Beethoven, this vast, near-record audience liked what it heard.

One had the impression that Dr. Munch, realizing that at such a time, whether the performance itself were momentous or not, he would be given the warmest of accolades, was determined with his whole musical being to earn them.

The opinion of many seemed to be that he did so, and brought his performers with him, from the slender wistfulness of the Copland piece into the fullest immensity of Beethoven, in a collaboration of the utmost virtuosity and penetration.

Dr. Munch gave himself so absolutely to the music that it was several moments, as he turned to face the applause, before he appeared to be receiving it consciously.

Trio Accept Applause

And then he brought forward two of his colleagues who are retiring as members of the orchestra — Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Jacobus Langendoen, member of the cello section. Both have served in the Boston Symphony for 42 years. Mr. Burgin is continuing, under Erich Leinsdorf, as associate conductor.

As for Dr. Munch, he flies for France tonight for a between-season holiday, after which he will return this fall as one of two conductors with the Orchestre de la Radio-diffusion Française on a nationwide tour.

Overheard on Saturday, following the orchestra's last open rehearsal, was one more to add to the many tributes Dr. Munch may take with him—and perhaps not the least.

A young man said to his friend, as they walked up to where you can see out across Lake Mahkeenac to the hills, "You know why I like him? I like him . . . because he conducts the way I would conduct."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 25 1962

Page Ten

MONTEUX GIVEN RISING TRIBUTE ON APPEARANCE

Orchestra and Audience Honor Conductor at 4th Tanglewood Concert

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The eminent French conductor and octogenarian, Pierre Monteux, made his 4th appearance of the season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday night.

Brilliant Career

When the square, squat figure appeared on stage, orchestra members and audience rose to do him honor.

It was a magnificent tribute to a long and brilliant career. He offered a program of solid worth, opening with the overture to "Euryanthe" by Weber, following that with Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis Der Maler," and closing with a gigantic performance of Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68.

It is a wonderful experience to watch this man so full of years lead his men. He conducts without score, and brings everything he plays a highly personal touch.

Joyous Notes

The joyous notes of the overture flowed like diamonds, and the equally joyous music written by Hindemith danced its way through a tapestry so clear and enlightening that it spoke for itself.

What power is this that makes music spring to life?

I think it is years of experience culminating in breadth of vision which only profound study can accomplish.

Certainly Monteux's studies

See MONTEUX GIVEN Page Ten

formances of music which needed all it could get in this manner to burst into full bloom. What more can one say?

The audience response was tremendous. Round after round of applause drew Monteux back to the stage, and this applause he in turn shared with the orchestra.

It was a joyous occasion for everyone, and it must have been a heartwarming occasion for Monteux.

We hope he returns to Tanglewood again and again.

Herald Tribune NEW YORK
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
AUG 27 1962

Tanglewood's Cheers Rival a Football Game

13 Years: Munch's Good By

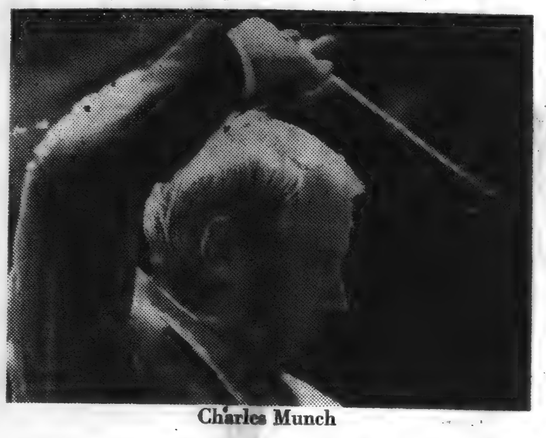
By Ronald Eyer
Music Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.

An emotional farewell to Charles Munch was roared out by a crowd of 15,300 as the 71-year-old conductor brought his baton down for the last time on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" at the conclusion of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony here at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, thus ending 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival.

The ovation, lasting nearly five minutes, was of the tumultuous sort more commonly heard in a football stadium. Cheering well-wishers crowded around the front of the platforming as hundreds of photographer's flashbulbs popped.

When a large laurel wreath was brought to the stage, the white-haired maestro placed his hand to his heart and took final farewell of his orchestra by shaking hands with his concert-master, Richard Burgin, and Richard Langendoen, cellist, who also is retiring.



Charles Munch

Dr. Munch will be succeeded at the opening of the coming season by Erich Leinsdorf, most recently a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

The last two concerts of the Berkshire Festival, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, were conducted by Dr. Munch, and the programs consisted of music with which he has been most prominently identified during his tenure with the orchestra. The music lies close to his heart.

Saturday's program, appropriately all French (Dr. Munch is Alsatian by birth) offered Berlioz "Symphonie Fatastique," Debussy's Symphonic Sketches, "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2. Sunday, in addition to the Ninth Symphony, there was Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for string, trumpet and English horn.

With the spring of a man 30 years his junior in his step as he came to the podium, a clear impatience to get on with the music as the audience greeted him with a standing ovation, the conductor launched into the arduous Berlioz work with a vitality he has not often duplicated in recent years. The opening movement, "Reveries, Passions," was a bit tentative, but with the waltz movement and from there through "Scene in the Meadow," with its beautiful pastoral passages for English horn, "March to the Scaffold," and the eerie "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath," the work was pregnant with imagination. The evocation of its dramatic content, far from being just another reading, drew upon every resource of the orchestra.

"La Mer," one of the special properties of the Boston Symphony since the days of its late conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, brought forth all the opulence of tone and brilliance of color that characterize this orchestra at its best.

For the Beethoven Symphony, Dr. Munch had the services of the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, and the University of Montreal Chorus, of which Fernand Graton is director, and a quartet composed of Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone.

It was a truly festive performance with impressive thrust and drive, not only in the three instrumental movements, but in the soaring "ode" in which Beethoven joins Schiller to call for the brotherhood of all men under God. This was a summons of his own, perhaps, a parting word from yesterday's conductor to a world even farther removed than ever from the ideal of the poet and the musician.

Sensing the significance of the occasion, both the soloists and the chorus rose magnificently to the conductor's call for a grand finale. The chorus of young voices was very big, but Beethoven was calling upon the millions and the profusion of sound did not seem too much. The soloists gave everything they had to make the solo and quartet parts a match in grandeur to the chorus and orchestra.

The long, long thoughts of the Copland piece, extracted from music he wrote for Harold Clurman's play of the same name, were expressed in sensitive, nostalgic, and beautifully echoing, muted tones by Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn—both first-chair men in the orchestra.

The preceding Friday night's concert was conducted by Pierre Monteux, whose association with the Boston Symphony began two generations ago. A disappointingly small crowd heard his wondrously settled and serene performances of the Overture to "Euryanthe," Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis Der Maler," with mountainous facades from the Boston brass and reports from the percussion that echoed like pistol shots—and, finally, a suavely sensitive performance of Brahms' First Symphony.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR
D. 294,496
AUG 27 1962

SHOW BIZ

A crowd of more than 15,000 roared a five-minute ovation for Dr. Charles Munch at the end of his last performance with the Boston Symphony before his retirement. He has been music director of the symphony for 13 years.

AL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
UFFALO EVENING NEWS
Monday, August 27, 1962

15,300 at Tanglewood Give Munch Big Tribute, Farewell

By JOHN DWYER
Buffalo News Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 27—A standing audience of 15,300 shouted and, applauded, waved handkerchiefs and wept in an extraordinary tribute to conductor Charles Munch Sunday afternoon in the Berkshire Music Festival shed.

Dr. Munch's baton came to rest on the closing chord of the great Beethoven Ninth "Choral" Symphony, and with it he closed his 13-year directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA, in an unusually keyed-up and dramatic mood, the festival choir and singers of Montreal University, soprano Adele Addisson, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and bass Donald Gramm put their all into the monumental work.

Preceded by a sensitive reading of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," with its mystic horn and woodwind episodes, the Beethoven symphony seemed to have even more size and grandeur, in contrast with the allusive and impressionistic opening piece.

On any other occasion, with any other ensemble on stage, one might have quarreled with the reckless drive and rush of the scherzo and the pace of the choral finale.

* * *

BUT EVERYONE'S PULSE was running high on this occasion, a moving valedictory for a distinguished world musician. He will make guest appearances in the major music capitals, of course, and even return to Tanglewood for concerts. But with this concert, his directorship ceased and an era passed. It was an intense and touching moment.

The combined choruses shared the emotional charge and sang out the declamatory, joyous phrases of the Schiller "Ode to Joy" with unusual drive and rhythmic impact.

The quartet of soloists, given the most difficult, least singable roles in the whole Beethoven work, performed their ungrateful task with valor.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE extended itself in applause for the orchestra in its closing festival program, the chorus and soloists. But, in truth, their eyes and hearts were turned, first and last, to the quiet, introspective Alsatian maestro on the podium.

Dr. Munch came back again

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 27 1962

Tanglewood

Audience Hails Munch Finale

By Louis Chapin
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch Sunday afternoon conducted his final program, at Tanglewood, after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony. This has been his 12th Berkshire Festival season.

An audience of over 15,000 filled the Music Shed and spread out over the acres of lawn stretching up to the tree-shaded center of the estate. They heard performances of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, for the closing movement of which the orchestra was joined by the choruses of the Berkshire Music Center and the University of Montreal.

Accolades Earned

The quartet of soloists consisted of Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone.

Judging by their close attention and the 12-minute ovation which greeted the final whiplash cadences of the Beethoven, this vast, near-record audience liked what it heard.

One had the impression that Dr. Munch, realizing that at such a time, whether the performance itself were momentous or not, he would be given the warmest of accolades, was determined with his whole musical being to earn them.

The opinion of many seemed to be that he did so, and brought his performers with him, from the slender wistfulness of the Copland piece into the fullest immensity of Beethoven, in a collaboration of the utmost virtuosity and penetration.

Dr. Munch gave himself so absolutely to the music that it was several moments, as he turned to face the applause, before he appeared to be receiving it consciously.

Trio Accept Applause

And then he brought forward two of his colleagues who are retiring as members of the orchestra — Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Jacobus Langendoen, member of the cello section. Both have served in the Boston Symphony for 42 years. Mr. Burgin is continuing, under Erich Leinsdorf, as associate conductor.

As for Dr. Munch, he flies for France tonight for a between-season holiday, after which he will return this fall as one of two conductors with the Orchestre de la Radiodiffusion Française on a nationwide tour.

Overheard on Saturday, following the orchestra's last open rehearsal, was one more to add to the many tributes Dr. Munch may take with him—and perhaps not the least.

A young man said to his friend, as they walked up to where you can see out across Lake Mahkeenac to the hills, "You know why I like him? I like him . . . because he conducts the way I would conduct."

SAD BUT TRUE

ATTENTION
SUMMER CLOSEOUT ON Aluminum and Rubberoid SIDING
$6.50 Per Sq.
CALL FOR A FREE ESTIMATE
SUBURBAN HOME IMP.
RE 3-2030

26. WINS not wine. The clue assumes that the effect will be to some degree "exciting," in any case. WINS is, therefore, the better answer since wine may actually be soporific.

CLUES DOWN

2. FEARS not years. Psychia-have made him aware of much that still eludes the younger conductors. The orchestra was in splendid form, and its members played their hearts out for this grand old man of music.

Their response to his every direction was instantaneous. There is something less than beautiful sound throughout this work, but every note in meaningful.

Even if the story eluded many listeners, they knew something was up and being accomplished. This was music-making in the grand manner.

Blinding Beauty

Brahms' First Symphony, perhaps the greatest first written by any composer, is something very special to both listener and conductor.

Many have sought to probe its depths without more than superficial success, but when a man with years of experience and study assumes such a task, one finds within this music a blinding beauty.

So it was Friday night as Monteux took charge. From the first gallant phrases of the opening movement to those more tender episodes of the second movement, to the tremendous finale, Monteux was the undisputed master.

Revealing Concert

I seem to remember performances of greater decibel rating, but seldom have I listened to a performance which so honestly presented the composer's message. There was never a ponderous moment or slacking of tempi or minimizing of phrase.

The music was well served. I think this has been one of the most revealing concerts of the entire season, a season which has been notable for finely prepared, magnificently played performances of music which needed all it could get in this manner to burst into full bloom. What more can one say?

The audience response was tremendous. Round after round of applause drew Monteux back to the stage, and this applause he in turn shared with the orchestra.

It was a joyous occasion for everyone, and it must have been a heartwarming occasion for Monteux.

We hope he returns to Tanglewood again and again.

164

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 27 1962

MUNCH HAILED AT LAST CONCERT—A swirling, cheering whistling audience of 15,300 crowds toward platform of Music Shed at Tanglewood to give ear-splitting ovation to Charles Munch, left, following closing selection of 1962 Festival season yesterday, marking his retirement as music director of Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sharing plaudits with him are Jacobus Langendoen, center, cellist, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster, both 42-year veterans of orchestra who also are retiring. (Story on Page Seven).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 28 1962

Dr. Munch Acclaimed

The eighth and final week-end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood closed Sunday afternoon to repeated, tumultuous roars from the 15,300 devotees who had gathered to pay their affectionate and appreciative respects to Dr. Charles Munch, the retiring music director, for 13 years, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For his last concert Dr. Munch had chosen Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. In the former, especially, conductor and performers were joined in a most touching and evocative performance, as if saying farewell to what has been a musically and personally reciprocal association, with supreme and unforgettable moments.

In many minds and hearts nostalgic reminiscences began at Saturday evening's concert of French composers, including Berlioz' Fantastique Symphony, Debussy's La Mer and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, Ballet Suite No. 2. Programmatic and impressionistic, a dream-like quality pervaded all the interpretations. In the Fantastique Symphony, again one heard the themes that would inspire future composers, and shivered at the macabre parody of the Dies Irae in the Witches Sunday.

Esthetically impassioned heights were attained with each work, the Debussy delineated without exaggeration, the audience of 10,330 matching their applause for La Mer with its final tones. Dr. Munch and his men drew each nuance of the Pan and Syrinx story mimed by Daphnis and Chloe with opaque finesse, from the first calm expansiveness to the final joyous abandon. How utterly youthful is that first tentative theme from Pan's reed-fashioned flute!

For his final adieu, Dr. Beethoven's massive Ninth Symphony, the lovely and magnificently capable voices of Adele Addison, soprano, and contralto Florence Kopleff, formed the necessary quartet with John McCollum, tenor, and baritone Donald Gramm. The excellent sounding chorus comprised the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson and the University of Montreal Chorus, trained by its director, Fernand Gratton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center.

For his final adieu, Dr. Munch chose a work he has presented at the Festival's termination many times, but perhaps, never inspiring quite as splendidly integrated a performance. The tears of approval and applause were spontaneous and justified, all of which, in his usual warm manner, he shared with the soloists, the retiring concertmaster and cellist. A handsome laurel wreath, gathered from the Berkshire Hills, was given him in appreciation for what he has achieved during his 13 years. Among these were all the works of Berlioz, except for "Les Troyens," and an ever changing but deep penetration that went beyond the music, straight to the composer's heart whatever the period. It is said that no position ever was played in the same period of time with Dr. Munch's direction, a small proof of his desire to avoid formal and expected interpretations.

This memorable [illegible] was video taped by several cameras, seen on stage and left and right stage and [illegible] on the central support of the Big Shed. It is expected that the program will be [illegible] from Boston soon and [illegible] New York later in the season. One hopes that [illegible] will gain a wider exposure before his farewell appearances here and at [illegible]

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,581
AUG 27 1962

Ends Boston Tenure

15,000 Cheer Munch In Farewell Concert

CHARLES MUNCH

Lenox, Mass. — Charles Munch ended his 13 years as conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony here yesterday afternoon as the blue Berkshires echoed to the farewell cheers of some 15,000 gathered in the Music Shed at Tanglewood for the season's final concert.

Mr. Munch, who lets his music talk for him, made no farewell speech. But he was obviously moved by the great crowd's tumultuous ovation and by the presentation of a large laurel wreath from members of the orchestra. On it was inscribed, "To Charles Munch, with thanks."

• • •

FOR HIS FINAL appearance as director of the orchestra, Mr. Munch chose Beethoven's Ninth Symphony as his principal work.

The Alsatian-born maestro left today for Europe where he will make a few guest appearances with major orchestras of the continent.

• • •

ON SEPT. 17, when the Boston Orchestra meets for its first rehearsal of the 1962-63 season, Erich Leinsdorf will take over the podium as permanent conductor and musical director. The former Rochester conductor also will be director of the 1963 Berkshire Festival which will open July 5 and continue for eight weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 27 1962

Munch Cheered by 15,000 As He Retires From BSO

(Photo on Page One)

The baton of conductor Charles Munch fell expressively, the final swell of Beethoven's Ninth faded into the Berkshire Hills, and the 70-year-old conductor stepped from the podium into retirement after 13 years as music director for the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood yesterday.

Cheering Audience

But a swirling, cheering and whistling audience of 15,300 recalled the white-haired French conductor six times in an emotional 10-minute ovation punctuated by repeated roars of "Bravo" which reverberated through the Music Shed.

The audience of 15,300 was the largest in five years. Mr. Munch's retirement and the tidal flood of homage highlighted the closing concert of the Berkshire Music Festival season.

Mr. Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was taken to the stage. The ribbon was emblazoned with "To Charles Munch. Thank you." It came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Mr. Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Also Retiring

Also retiring and taking bows with Mr. Munch were Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Jacobus Langendoen, cellist, both 42-year veterans of the orchestra.

In the 13 years under Mr. Munch's charge, the Boston Symphony Orchestra won two American International Music Fund Awards and six New York Music Critics Circle Awards for compositions first performed in New York, and nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Mr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences prize.

During his tenure Mr. Munch presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 27 1962

145

Whitestone

FINAL TRIBUTE is paid to Dr. Charles Munch in the Music Shed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Festival Chorus and largest crowd of Tanglewood season (15,300) following Sunday's performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which coincidentally was heard in the Shed for first time when it was opened in 1938. Audience gave Dr. Munch 15-minute ovation, recalled him 10 times to the stage.

Munch's Leaving Mitigated By 8-Week Season's Success

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

TANGLEWOOD — When Dr. Charles Munch put down his baton Sunday afternoon at the closing 1962 Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra before an audience of 15,300, the largest of the season, he was both happy and sad.

The 71-year-old conductor of the BSO was happy because his strong belief in an extended season at Tanglewood proved its worth, but was saddened at leaving an orchestra which ranks among the greatest in the world.

His face was animated with a smile each time he was recalled to the stage to acknowledge the ovations of the huge crowd which turned out for the final concert, but a veil of sadness fell over him as he left Tanglewood for the last time after 13 years as musical director of the BSO.

Attendance Up 7,000

This season's total attendance for all activities at the Berkshire Festival, exclusive of the Berkshire Music Center events, was about 7,000 more than last year.

It was Dr. Munch who suggested a few years ago that the Berkshire Festival season be extended. He felt an operation such as Tanglewood, with a summer school operated by the BSO, should devote more time to help mold the great musicians of tomorrow and at the same time provide for the public performances of masterpieces of the past as well as contemporary works. This, he felt, could not be done in a few weeks.

Defending his programming of contemporary works at Tanglewood, Mr. Munch has always felt it his duty to devote, when possible, part of a concert to the music written "in our time."

"We must make heard the music that represents the artistic expression of the time we live in, music that may at the same time prepare for the future," he said.

During his tenure with the BSO he has presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

Although attendance was down about 9,000 for the 15 major concerts by the full BSO in the Music Shed, it jumped for the Bach-Mozart series held early in the season. This season the Berkshire Festival concerts drew to Tanglewood 117,035, compared to 138,871 last year, but the overall attendance for the season, covering eight weeks, was 217,642 compared to 210,438 last year for a seven-week season. Ticket sales this year totaled $546,894.50 compared to last year's total o $533,136.

The eight-week season of the Festival will be repeated again next year. While it is difficult t make comparisons with former years, Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra feels the eight week season is worthwhile because "i has proven to us this is what the people want."

Last March when the BSO announced a 50-week season for the orchestra, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees explained that the orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards.

A month later, Dr. Munch announced his retirement as conductor of the BSO because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the world's most prestigious posts. In 1958 Dr. Munch suffered a mild heart seizure and following a rest he returned to his conducting duties. Two years ago, toward the end of a busy Tanglewood season, he was ordered to slow down and this summer he was again instructed by his physicians to take off a weekend from his conducting duties in order to conserve his energy for the final weeks of the Festival season.

For many summers in the Berkshires, his favorite pastime on Mondays—his day off—was golf, but this season he was able to play only three or four rounds because of his health.

But in spite of the rigorous life of a conductor, Dr. Munch has ahead of him after a rest in France, a schedule which would tax anyone twice as young.

Flying to Paris

When he left his summer home in Richmond last night, he drove to New York for a two-day visit. Then he will fly to his home near Paris to prepare a United States tour as conductor of the French National Orchestra. He plans to conduct at the Montreaux, Vienna, Prague and Santander Festivals. He has been invited to conduct concerts of the Brussels Philharmonic, the Madrid Orchestra, Japan Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, the Orchestra of Radio Rome, Radio Turin and Radio Florence, the Buenos Aires Orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Suisse Romande and do a tour for the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

Whether he will make all of these engagements is uncertain at the moment, but he has agreed next season to return at the invitation of the BSO trustees and his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence. And in addition to these, he has agreed to conduct concerts of the Chicago Symphony, the National Symphony, the Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony.

He was unable to accept two invitations to the White House from President and Mrs. Kennedy in the past year, but hinted he may conduct the French National Orchestra at a diplomatic reception to be given in Washington by the Kennedy's next year, and if time permits he may even drop into the Berkshires to see how th ngs are going along at Tanglewood.

146

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 27 1962

Mitchell

FINAL BOW was taken Sunday afternoon in the Music Shed at Tanglewood by these men who retired from the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the closing concert of the 1962 Berkshire Festival season. Left to right, Richard Burgin, concertmaster, Dr. Charles Munch, and Jacobus Langendoen, a cellist.

Music Review

Finale at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

EVERY ONE of the 15,300 in the audience at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon will long remember Charles Munch's farewell.

For the close of the 1962 Berkshire Festival and the termination of his 13-year tenure as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Munch chose a program of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and the Beethoven ninth symphony.

No athletic head nor political candidate ever got a more frenzied manifestation of approval, for the moment skyrocketing to worship, than Munch yesterday.

The orchestra, in both concerts of the final weekend, was in superb fettle and the French program, Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel, Saturday night had been on the same lofty level of brilliance as that of yesterday.

* * *

IT WAS to be expected that Munch would choose his favorites for his valedictory. Every conductor has his personal preferences, and a survey of any director over a long period will show a leaning in certain directions. Indeed, the invitation to guest conductors during a season usually has the dual purpose of giving the permanent director a short relief and also, hopefully, to extend the repertory in some otherwise neglected area.

For the close of the 1957 Berkshire Festival Munch chose the same program as yesterday with the identical soloists. Roger Voisin was trumpet and Louis Speyer English horn soloists in the Copland, and Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone, the soloists in the baritone, the soloists in the Beethoven choral symphony. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisted by Le Choeur des etudiants de l'universite de Montreal, prepared by [illegible] Graton, infused an element of majesty at the moment Beethoven finally calls upon them, and Munch graciously brought both leaders to the stage to share in the acknowledgement of the tumultuous demonstration.

* * *

THE QUARTET of vocal soloists was superb. Gramm announced his initial declamation with dominating conviction and as the opportunities ensued, each one of the other singers upheld his individual allotment with distinguished vocal, ensemble, dramatic and muscial attributes.

There was a spirit of some special impending event as the huge crowd assembled under ideal weather conditions, and as the Beethoven was revealed in ever broadening grandeur, a tension was silently accumulating. At the concluding bars of the symphony the impatient flood of enthusiasm burst its restraints with a frenzy comparable to the response reported to us of old dictators' harangues.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT there was a premonition of what was to be expected. The "Fantastic" by now must have the hyphenated names of Berlioz-Munch in many minds, so often and so enjoyable have been its readings these last baker's dozen years. On every repetition it has been Munch's good luck to have the assistance on English horn of Louis Speyer in the "Scenes in the Country." Munch called the distinguished musician to the front as usual to allow the audience to see whence had come the dulcet-inflected phrases.

It becomes a little redundant at this point to speak of "La Mer" of Debussy and the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" as performed by the Boston orchestra. There need be no qualifying reservation in the speculation of what a brilliant orchestra can do with a mediocre conductor, or of the reverse, a mediocre orchestra with a brilliant conductor. But when both are so incontestably able, and the current of inspirations flows both ways, it is inevitable that heights of grandeur will be reached which will remain vivid in the memories of all who are present on such occasions.

* * *

EVEN IF the day had not been one of special significance the outbursts of applause would have been in order, for the orchestra had never been in a more virtuosic and zestful humor. Both programs were phenomenally prosperous voyages over terrains which they all had traversed innumerable times, but these had the spark to raise them that last degree to incandescence.

In the demonstration which marked the end of yesterday afternoon one of the most touching incidents was the retirement from the post of concertmaster of Richard Burgin, who came to the orchestra during the regime of Pierre Monteux and remained during the 25 years of Koussevitzky and the 13 of Munch. A more inspiring participating leader an orchestra never had, nor a more able one. Burgin's musical scholarship raised him above the ordinary run of musicians and yet he always remained voluntarily a primus inter pares.

How many times he may have played the various symphonies of Beethoven, Brahams, Tchaikovsky and all the others he surely must have lost count, but he always played each new reading with a vivacious freshness which raised the spirit of the whole orchestra to that of a new adventure, no matter how jaded may have become their opinion of the well-worn music. No concertmaster was ever more respected and regarded with more affection.

Also sharing the honors of the afternoon was Jacobus Langendoen who was leaving, too, after 42 years in the cello section. Munch linked arms with him and Burgin in a spirit of genuine esteem.

Mitchell

'THANK YOU' read the inscription on the ribbon of this wreath presented to Dr. Charles Munch by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the close of Sunday afternoon's concert, which ended his career as musical director of the BSO. At right is stage manager Al Robison.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

AUG 27 1962

Munch, Boston Symphony In Finale at Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Lenox, Mass. — Charles Munch made his final Saturday night appearance as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here at Tanglewood before an audience of more than 10,000.

It was a gala occasion in more ways than one. Munch had chosen an all-French program and in works by Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel he was gloriously in his element. Never have I heard quite as stirring a performance of the Berlioz "Symphonie Fanstastique."

If a Von Karajan can sometimes give a more poetic orientation to the first two movements, there is no question that Munch brings the "March to the Scaffold" and the "Witches' Sabbath" to a pitch of excitement unmatched by any other conductor. And the Boston Orchestra Saturday night played with a fire and intensity seldom heard at these Summer concerts.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE seemed to sense that this was the climax of the evening and gave the conductor a standing ovation that threatened to last for the duration of the intermission. I was not a witness at Koussevitsky's final concerts with the orchestra but I doubt that the acclamation could have been more prolonged.

In Debussy's "La Mer," I prefer more emphasis on string tone than Munch favors. To my mind, this interpretation lingers too long on coloristic details without producing the tonal confluence that a Stokowski or an Ormandy obtains. However, this is more a matter of taste than a criticism.

* * *

THE RAVEL "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 aroused no such ambivalence of feeling in this reviewer. It is no accident that Munch's recent recording of the complete ballet score won the Grand Prix du Disque in France.

The great brass section of the Boston Orchestra was in prime form and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute solos were floated on the evening air with gossamer effect. It was a richly gratifying conclusion to one of Tanglewood's memorable concerts.

It is reported that Munch will be a guest conductor with the Boston Orchestra for four weeks next season and that he will also conduct a French orchestra in its tour of this country.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,200

AUG 27 1962

Symphony's Munch Given Rousing Ovati

LENOX—Dr. Charles Munch ended his 13-y ton Symphony Orchestra leadership amid an en ovation. At the final concert of the Berkshire Fest Tanglewood in the Berkshires, a 10 minute ovation b the 80-year-old conductor on stage six times. The F born Munch was visibly affected by the heartfelt enthusiasm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

Retirement at Tanglewood

Retiring with the Boston Symphony's Charles Munch Sunday at Tanglewood were Concertmaster Richard Burgin, left, and Cellist Jacobus Langendoen, right, both with the orchestra 42 years. Above, Munch presents the two men to share in the applause at the close of Sunday's concert.

Memorable Day in Lenox for Conductor and Critic

A wildly cheering audience called Charles Munch, left, repeatedly back to the stage after his final performance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The occasion also marked the retirement of Willard M. Clark, The Union's music critic the past 41 years. Right, Clark chats with Adele Addison, of this city, soprano soloist at Sunday's concert. Clark has written admiringly of Miss Addison's work for many years.

Munch Given Ovation, Faces Busy Future

By A STAFF REPORTER

LENOX — Charles Munch stepped down from the podium into retirement Sunday at Tanglewood.

Munch, who has been the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 13 years left the stage, tears in his eyes, through waves of thunderous applause.

His career with the orchestra ended on a peak of triumph as, once again, he fused the members of the orchestra into a single instrument for a performance of the Ninth Symphony by Beethoven.

He received an ovation as he entered, but it was insignificant compared to the ovation at the end of the symphony. As he brought the orchestra and chorus to a close, the crowd swept in toward the stage, applauding and yelling wildly. The orchestra rose and joined in the applause.

They called him back again and again with sustained and rhythmic applause and greeted him, each time he reentered, with a huge roar of "Bravo!"

Persons in the crowd beneath him, pressed close to the stage, were packed into a tight mass. They stepped on each other's toes and elbowed each other as they cheered and clapped.

Munch, his white hair rumpled by the exertions of directing, smiled and bowed. He was obviously moved by the reception.

In his curtain calls he presented the orchestra and the soloists and two performers who were retiring with him. He received a wreath from the festival's trustees decorated with a simple ribbon reading "Charles Munch, thank you."

Finally, with his head bowed, he left the stage for the last time and the applause dwindled and stopped.

See RETIREMENT Page Seven

Record Attendance

The audience for Munch's final performance and the closing concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's season, was a record for recent years: 15,800 persons. A festival representative said it was the largest in the last five years.

The Music Shed itself was completely filled. Hundreds more stood, baking in the hot sun, three or four deep against the rope barriers outside the shed, and many more sat or lay on the grass around the shed.

The road leading from the center of Lenox contained a long traffic jam starting about an hour before the performance, according to the police.

Day for Retirements

It was a day for retirements. Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Jacobus Langendoen, cellist, both with the orchestra 42 years, also stepped down Sunday. Munch presented them on the stage at the close during his ovation.

The Union has recorded the retirement, effective Sept. 1, of Willard M. Clark, its music critic the past 41 years. Clark dictated his last review of a Music Festival performance immediately after the concert, and then ran a gauntlet of handclasps from his friends at the festival. He left sadly, but vowing to return for next year's season. His review appears elsewhere in this paper.

Munch is stepping into a busy retirement. His successor, Erich Leinsdorf, has already invited him to conduct the orchestra for several performances next season. He has agreed to these and several other conducting dates in this country and has many invitations to conduct from other nations.

In his 13 years conducting the Boston Symphony, the orchestra received two American International Music Fund Awards. Six New York Music Critics Circle Awards were given to compositions first performed in New York by the orchestra.

He was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences awards for his recordings with the orchestra and the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

During his tenure, he presented performances of 168 contemporary works, 97 first Boston performances, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

Sunday's concert included Copland's "A Quiet City" besides the Beethoven work. The soloists in the Copland work were Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn.

The soloists in the Beethoven symphony were Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. The University of Montreal Chorus joined the Festival Chorus for the work.

Part of Large Crowd at Tanglewood

The largest crowd in recent years attended the season's final performance in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood Sunday. The performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, marked the retirement of Conductor Charles Munch. The crowd of 15,300 crowded the Music Shed and spilled out to the walks and lawns surrounding the shed.

148

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
AUG 27 1962

Cheers, Tears at Farewell

Rousing Salute to Munch

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX — Dr. Charles Munch ended his 13-year career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the final concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

From a near record audience of 15,300 came cheers, and some tears, after a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony that can be described only as magnificent.

This tumultuous ovation was the peak and climax of an emotional tension which had been building the entire week-end.

At the Saturday morning open rehearsal, Munch's last as head of this orchestra; at the Saturday night concert and again yesterday afternoon, audience as well as orchestra rose spontaneously in greeting.

At the end of each of the last two concerts, the public surged toward the apron of the stage, cameras flashing by the score.

Bedlam broke loose. People stood applauding, cheering, yelling, whistling.

Yesterday's ovation went on for nearly 10 minutes, and upon each of Munch's six returns to the stage, the voice of the public burst again in a hoarse roar of enthusiasm.

Where Dr. Munch had seemed chipper and smiling after Saturday night's concert, he was visibly affected yesterday.

MUNCH Page Twelve

stage which he had graced, often most brilliantly.

He departed for New York late in the afternoon, and is due to fly to Paris today.

Dr. Munch's last two concerts each had a special quality, unique to itself. Yesterday afternoon it was the great Ninth Symphony, the work that had dedicated the Tanglewood Music Shed in 1938, which Koussevitzky had conducted upon his farewell in 1949 and which Munch presented at his final concerts in Symphony Hall last April.

Saturday night represented a choice selection of the French music in which Dr. Munch had excelled — Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," perhaps the culmination of the conductor's power, passion and interpretive distinction; "La Mer," by Debussy, and the orchestrally lyrical finesse and interpretive response.

As one close to the orchestra expressed it, "This was their gift to Munch at the end of 13 years."

Obviously himself excited by the finale of the "Fantastic," Munch galloped up the tempo until it seemed the instruments, winds especially, could hardly articulate their notes. But they did, and beautifully, and that last plangent chord, with the marvelous crash of cymbals, left one weak and a little dazed.

So, too, with the Ninth Symphony yesterday afternoon. The orchestra gave a stupendous account of the work; the slow movement sang with a beauty that set at least one woman in tears; and the choral finale was, for all its inhuman demands upon human voices, gloriously eloquent.

Able Soloists

The soloists again were that individually able and well balanced foursome, Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

The Berkshire Festival

The 1962 Berkshire Festival has ended its increased season of eight weeks with a total attendance of 217,290 persons (210,438 in 1961) and total ticket sales of $546,894.50 against $533,136 a year ago.

And so an era for the Boston Symphony and for Tanglewood has ended. Next year the new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will be in command.

To be sure, this is not adieu to Dr. Munch, for he has been invited to be guest conducto four weeks in Boston next se son. But it will not be qu the same.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554
AUG 29 1962

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE

Possibly it is just as well Charles Munch neither made nor permitted any speeches to mark his farewell appearance as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday at Tanglewood. Every word that needed to be was spoken when the orchestra presented Mr. Munch a laurel wreath on which were emblazoned the words "To Charles Munch With Thanks."

The audience of 15,300, third largest in Berkshire Music Festival history, has given conductor Munch a farewell surpassing those tendered him during the year in Boston and New York in emotional intensity. Thirteen years as director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival gave Charles Munch an opportunity to bring musical enrichment to many of our neighbors. The opportunity did not go unused.

Now 70, Conductor Munch will take a European vacation before returning to the United States and several appearances as guest conductor. He hands the baton of the Boston Symphony and the directorship of the Berkshire Festival to Erich Leinsdorf, who will need a combination of his great skill and good luck to successfully replace the departed leader.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

A Rousing Finale

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Every available space on the huge lawns of Tanglewood and every seat in the great shed was filled by 15,300 people Sunday afternoon.

Special Occasion

This was a very special occasion. It marked the close of the termination of 13 years of music making with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the part of Charles Munch.

I don't think Munch will ever forget the tumultuous greeting

See FINALE Page Twelve

— four superb soloists, Donald Gramm, John McCollum, Adele Addison and Florence Kopleff; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the finest chorus that the Music Center has produced in years.

Soaring Tones

To hear Adele Addison's pure tones soar over an ensemble was a joy to the ear. She was in superb voice and spirits.

Miss Kopleff's gorgeous instrument was shown to full advantage, and her supreme musicianship caused this contralto role to sound more meaningful than it often does.

I don't know how many times Donald Gramm has opened the Ninth Symphony, but I do know that each time I have heard him sing, he has shown a greater vocal command and musical approach to this music.

Brisk Pace

John McCullum, another veteran, is probably the best tenor of his ilk in this neck of the woods. There were a few moments of throaty singing, but for the most part the voice was free and projected clearly.

What is there to say about the Munch reading of this symphony that has not been said? He does not indulge in histrionics nor force the chorus and soloists beyond their vocal abilities.

To some this might mean a dull reading, but Munch takes a brisk pace which keeps the music moving. The tremendous build-up to the "Ode to Joy" is accomplished through skillful handling of dynamics, and it proved Sunday to be an awesome thing.

Fresh and Viril

To the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this music must seem old hat, but they played Sunday with a freshness, virility and enthusiasm, as if playing it for the first time.

I don't know what prompted Munch to open the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." Although Copland has been coupled with the greatest of composers, "Quiet City" did not seem to fit in.

It's not a very quiet city anyway, but unlike many of the Copland works, it has some melodic virtue.

Whatever the virtues of much of the music that has been heard here this season, it has drawn a total audience of 217,290 and a total box office receipt of $546,894.50, approximately $13,000 more than the seven-week season last year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
SEP 2

Charles Munch Conducts Last Performance

At Tanglewood last week, on an occasion distinguished by honest sentiment and by a sincere and long ovation by the capacity audience, Charles Munch brought to an end his long career as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the end of the ovation, a large laurel wreath was brought to the stage. White-haired, tall Mr. Munch placed his hand on his heart and said a final farewell to his orchestra by shaking hands with concertmaster Richard Burgin and cellist Richard Langendoen, who is also retiring.

Appropriately enough, Dr. Munch ended his 13-year Boston career with a rousing performance of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9," which ends, as all music-lovers know, with Schiller's "Ode to Joy." In this thrilling ode, Beethoven joins with Schiller to call for the brotherhood of all men under God. We suspect that Dr. Munch had a purpose in this final selection; he knows that never before in the history of the world has such a message been more needed.

For us, the departure of Dr. Munch, to be succeeded this month by Erich Leinsdorf, is like the loss of an old and valued friend. We have reviewed many of his concerts during his 13 year tenure and have always been impressed by his dedication and by his particular affinity for French music, notably that of Debussy and Berlioz.

We have always been impressed, too, by his kindliness: more than one Boston Symphony player has told us that Dr. Munch is an ideal man for whom to work—sympathetic, understanding, compassionate.

During Dr. Munch's 13 years with the orchestra, he presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 58 U. S. premieres. In addition, under Dr. Munch the Boston Smyphony became the first American orchestra to visit Russia. Dr. Munch also led the Boston Symphony on tours of other European countries and of Japan. During Dr. Munch's tenure the orchestra received two American International Music Fund awards, honors from the American Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, nine Grand Prix des Disques, and the medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Although he is retiring from the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch will not be idle. He will return next season to Boston as a guest conductor and he will also appear in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Washington, D. C. He will also direct the French National Orchestra on its guest-conducting assignments in Montreux, Prague, Vienna, Brussels, Madrid, Tokyo, London, Rome, Florence, Turin, Berlin, Buenos Aires and Australia. It is good to know that he will continue to make music.

HERE AND THERE—Vincent Sheehan will edit a portion of the late Dorothy Thompson's letters and diaries dealing with her marriage to Sinclair Lewis . . . Kathryn Grayson is being sought to take over the female lead in the Broadway edition of "Camelot," beginning Oct. 22 . . . Magaret Leighton is leaving the cast of "Night of the Iguana" to co-star with Anthony Quinn in "Tchin-Tchin."

The New York Woodwind Quartet is touring Southeast Asia under State Department auspices . . . Bobby Vinton's recording of "Roses Are Red" has just passed the 1,000,000 mark in sales . . . Bill Cullen, Cleveland Amory, and Everett B. Morris (formerly of New Bedford) will narrate the NBC-TV news special on Sept. 22 on America's Cup . . . NBC owns 25 percent of the forthcoming Richard Rodgers-Alan Jay Lerner Broadway musical . . . Rodgers, incidentally, will be paid $150,000 for writing the score for the new film, "Lawrence of Arabia" . . . Top film at the box office at present is "Wonderful World of Brother Grimm" . . . The screen version of Gore Vidal's play, "The Best Man," will be produced by United Artists.

Dr. Munch Magnificent Leading Farewell 'Ninth'

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

A Rousing Finale

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Every available space on the huge lawns of Tanglewood and every seat in the great shed was filled by 15,300 people Sunday afternoon.

Special Occasion

This was a very special occasion. It marked the close of the termination of 13 years of music making with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the part of Charles Munch.

I don't think Munch will ever forget the tumultuous greeting

See FINALE Page

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
SEP

Charles Munch Conducts Last Performance

At Tanglewood last week, on an occasion distinguished by honest sentiment and by a sincere and long ovation by the capacity audience, Charles Munch brought to an end his long career as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the end of the ovation, a large laurel wreath was brought to the stage. White-haired, tall Mr. Munch placed his hand on his heart and said a final farewell to his orchestra by shaking hands with concertmaster Richard Burgin and cellist Richard Langendoen, who is also retiring.

Appropriately enough, Dr. Munch ended his 13-year Boston career with a rousing performance of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9," which ends, as all music-lovers know, with Schiller's "Ode to Joy." In this thrilling ode, Beethoven joins with Schiller to call for the brotherhood of all men under God. We suspect that Dr. Munch had a purpose in this final selection; he knows that never before in the history of the world has such a message been more needed.

For us, the departure of Dr. Munch, to be succeeded this month by Erich Leinsdorf, is like the loss of an old and valued friend. We have reviewed many of his concerts during his 13 year tenure and have always been impressed by his dedication and by his particular affinity for French music, notably that of Debussy and Berlioz.

We have always been impressed, too, by his kindliness; more than one Boston Symphony player has told us that Dr. Munch is an ideal man for whom to work—sympathetic, understanding, compassionate.

During Dr. Munch's 13 years with the orchestra, he presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 58 U. S. premieres. In addition, under Dr. Munch the Boston Smyphony became the first American orchestra to visit Russia. Dr. Munch also led the Boston Symphony on tours of other European countries and of Japan. During Dr. Munch's tenure the orchestra received two American International Music Fund awards, honors from the American Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, nine Grand Prix des Disques, and the medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Although he is retiring from the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch will not be idle. He will return next season to Boston as a guest conductor and he will also appear in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Washington, D. C. He will also direct the French National Orchestra on its guest-conducting assignments in Montreux, Prague, Vienna, Brussels, Madrid, Tokyo, London, Rome, Florence, Turin, Berlin, Buenos Aires and Australia. It is good to know that he will continue to make music.

HERE AND THERE—Vincent Sheehan will edit a portion of the late Dorothy Thompson's letters and diaries dealing with her marriage to Sinclair Lewis . . . Kathryn Grayson is being sought to take over the female lead in the Broadway edition of "Camelot," beginning Oct. 22 . . . Magaret Leighton is leaving the cast of "Night of the Iguana" to co-star with Anthony Quinn in "Tchin-Tchin."

The New York Woodwind Quartet is touring Southeast Asia under State Department auspices . . . Bobby Vinton's record of "Roses Are Red" has just passed the 1,000,000 mark in sales . . . Bill Cullen, Cleveland Amory, and Everett B. Morris (formerly of New Bedford) will narrate the NBC-TV news special Sept. 22 on America's Cup . . . NBC owns 25 percent of the forthcoming Richard Rodgers-Alan Jay Lerner Broadway musical.

Rodgers, incidentally, will be paid $150,000 for writing the score for the new film, "Lawrence of Arabia" . . . Top film at the box office at present is "Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm" . . . The screen version of Gore Vidal's play, "The Best Man," will be produced by United Artists.

MUNCH

Continued from the First Page

He managed to keep smiling, but his eyes were sad, his face lined and looking fatigued after the heroic exertions required by Beethoven's great choral symphony; the white double-breasted jacket which he wore with black evening trousers, his rosette of the French Legion of Honor in his lapel, looking damp and rumpled.

The retiring conductor summoned to him and put his arm around his two old colleagues, Richard Burgin, the concert master, and cellist Jacobus Langendoen. Burgin is retiring as concert master, though he will remain as associate conductor. Langendoen is retiring from the orchestra.

Earlier in the concert, after the introductory "Quiet City" by Aaron Copland, Dr. Munch had saluted solo trumpeter Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer, that great English horn virtuoso.

Just before the last recall a green laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was inscribed: "To Charles Munch. Thank you." It was the gift of the Boston Symphony trustees.

A last bow, a last smile, a touching of his heart, a word to concert master Burgin (no doubt an instruction for the musicians to disperse), and Charles Munch had left the stage which he had graced, often most brilliantly.

He departed for New York late in the afternoon, and is due to fly to Paris today.

Dr. Munch's last two concerts each had a special quality, unique to itself. Yesterday afternoon it was the great Ninth Symphony, the work that had dedicated the Tanglewood Music Shed in 1938, which Koussevitzky had conducted upon his farewell in 1949 and which Munch presented at his final concerts in Symphony Hall last April.

Saturday night represented a choice selection of the French music in which Dr. Munch had excelled — Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," perhaps the culmination of the conductor's power, passion and interpretive distinction; "La Mer," by Debussy, and the orchestrally jewelled second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Anyone in these audiences—10,336 Saturday night—would have sensed the concerts to have been extraordinary music-making.

But an old hand with the Boston Symphony knew that these were occasions among occasions, Munch at his finest and most fiery, the orchestra giving its all in tonal richness, technical finesse and interpretive response.

As one close to the orchestra expressed it, "This was their gift to Munch at the end of 13 years."

Obviously himself excited by the finale of the "Fantastic," Munch galloped up the tempo until it seemed the instruments, winds especially, could hardly articulate their notes. But they did, and beautifully, and that last plangent chord, with the marvelous crash of cymbals, left one weak and a little dazed.

So, too, with the Ninth Symphony yesterday afternoon. The orchestra gave a stupendous account of the work; the slow movement sang with a beauty that set at least one woman in tears; and the choral finale was, for all its inhuman demands upon human voices, gloriously eloquent.

Able Soloists

The soloists again were that individually able and well balanced foursome, Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, superbly prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, was augmented by the mixed voices of the University of Montreal Chorus, Fernand Graton, director.

The sound in the Music Shed incidentally, showed yet further improvement by the addition of three more rows of triangular panels to the excellent Talbot acoustical canopy.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival has ended its increased season of eight weeks with a total attendance of 217,290 persons (210,438 in 1961) and total ticket sales of $546,894.50 against $533,136 a year ago.

And so an era for the Boston Symphony and for Tanglewood has ended. Next year the new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will be in command.

To be sure, this is not adieu to Dr. Munch, for he has been invited to be guest conductor four weeks in Boston next season. But it will not be quite the same.

— four superb soloists, Donald Gramm, John McCollum, Adele Addison and Florence Kopleff; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the finest chorus that the Music Center has produced in years.

Soaring Tones

To hear Adele Addison's pure tones soar over an ensemble was a joy to the ear. She was in superb voice and spirits.

Miss Kopleff's gorgeous instrument was shown to full advantage, and her supreme musicianship caused this contralto role to sound more meaningful than it often does.

I don't know how many times Donald Gramm has opened the Ninth Symphony, but I do know that each time I have heard him sing, he has shown a greater vocal command and musical approach to this music.

Brisk Pace

John McCullum, another veteran, is probably the best tenor of his ilk in this neck of the woods. There were a few moments of throaty singing, but for the most part the voice was free and projected clearly.

What is there to say about the Munch reading of this symphony that has not been said? He does not indulge in histrionics nor force the chorus and soloists beyond their vocal abilities.

To some this might mean a dull reading, but Munch takes a brisk pace which keeps the music moving. The tremendous build-up to the "Ode to Joy" is accomplished through skillful handling of dynamics, and it proved Sunday to be an awesome thing.

Fresh and Viril

To the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this music must seem old hat, but they played Sunday with a freshness, virility and enthusiasm, as if playing it for the first time.

I don't know what prompted Munch to open the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." Although Copland has been coupled with the greatest of composers, "Quiet City" did not seem to fit in.

It's not a very quiet city anyway, but unlike many of the Copland works, it has some melodic virtue.

Whatever the virtues of much of the music that has been heard here this season, it has drawn a total audience of 217,290 and a total box office receipt of $546,894.50, approximately $13,000 more than the seven-week season last year.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554
AUG 29 1962

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE

Possibly it is just as well Charles Munch neither made nor permitted any speeches to mark his farewell appearance as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday at Tanglewood. Every word that needed to be was spoken when the orchestra presented Mr. Munch a laurel wreath on which were emblazoned the words "To Charles Munch With Thanks."

The audience of 15,300, third largest in Berkshire Music Festival history, has given conductor Munch a farewell surpassing those tendered him during the year in Boston and New York in emotional intensity. Thirteen years as director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival gave Charles Munch an opportunity to bring musical enrichment to many of our neighbors. The opportunity did not go unused.

Now 70, Conductor Munch will take a European vacation before returning to the United States and several appearances as guest conductor. He hands the baton of the Boston Symphony and the directorship of the Berkshire Festival to Erich Leinsdorf, who will need a combination of his great skill and good luck to successfully replace the departed leader.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Dr. Munch Magnificent Leading Farewell 'Ninth'

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 27 1962

MUNCH

Continued from the First Page

He managed to keep smiling, but his eyes were sad, his face lined and looking fatigued after the heroic exertions required by Beethoven's great choral symphony; the white double-breasted jacket which he wore with black evening trousers, his rosette of the French Legion of Honor in his lapel, looking damp and rumpled.

The retiring conductor summoned to him and put his arm around his two old colleagues, Richard Burgin, the concert master, and cellist Jacobus Langendoen. Burgin is retiring as concert master, though he will remain as associate conductor. Langendoen is retiring from the orchestra.

Earlier in the concert, after the introductory "Quiet City" by Aaron Copland, Dr. Munch had saluted solo trumpeter Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer, that great English horn virtuoso.

Just before the last recall a green laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was inscribed: "To Charles Munch. Thank you." It was the gift of the Boston Symphony trustees.

A last bow, a last smile, a touching of his heart, a word to concert master Burgin (no doubt an instruction for the musicians to disperse), and Charles Munch had left the stage which he had graced, often most brilliantly.

He departed for New York late in the afternoon, and is due to fly to Paris today.

Dr. Munch's last two concerts each had a special quality, unique to itself. Yesterday afternoon it was the great Ninth Symphony, the work that had dedicated the Tanglewood Music Shed in 1938, which Koussevitzky had conducted upon his farewell in 1949 and which Munch presented at his final concerts in Symphony Hall last April.

Saturday night represented a choice selection of the French music in which Dr. Munch had excelled — Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," perhaps the culmination of the conductor's power, passion and interpretive distinction: "La Mer," by Debussy, and the orchestrally jewelled second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Anyone in these audiences—10,336 Saturday night—would have sensed the concerts to have been extraordinary music-making.

But an old hand with the Boston Symphony knew that these were occasions among occasions, Munch at his finest and most fiery, the orchestra giving its all in tonal richness, technical finesse and interpretive response.

As one close to the orchestra expressed it, "This was their gift to Munch at the end of 13 years."

Obviously himself excited by the finale of the "Fantastic," Munch galloped up the tempo until it seemed the instruments, winds especially, could hardly articulate their notes. But they did, and beautifully, and that last plangent chord, with the marvelous crash of cymbals, left one weak and a little dazed.

So, too, with the Ninth Symphony yesterday afternoon. The orchestra gave a stupendous account of the work; the slow movement sang with a beauty that set at least one woman in tears; and the choral finale was, for all its inhuman demands upon human voices, gloriously eloquent.

Able Soloists

The soloists again were that individually able and well balanced foursome, Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, superbly prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, was augmented by the mixed voices of the University of Montreal Chorus, Fernand Graton, director.

The sound in the Music Shed, incidentally, showed yet further improvement by the addition of three more rows of triangular panels to the excellent Talbot acoustical canopy.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival has ended its increased season of eight weeks with a total attendance of 217,290 persons (210,438 in 1961) and total ticket sales of $546,894.50 against $533,136 a year ago.

And so an era for the Boston Symphony and for Tanglewood has ended. Next year the new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will be in command.

To be sure, this is not adieu to Dr. Munch, for he has been invited to be guest conductor four weeks in Boston next season. But it will not be quite the same.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554

AUG 29 1962

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE

Possibly it is just as well Charles Munch neither made nor permitted any speeches to mark his farewell appearance as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday at Tanglewood. Every word that needed to be was spoken when the orchestra presented Mr. Munch a laurel wreath on which were emblazoned the words "To Charles Munch With Thanks."

The audience of 15,300, third largest in Berkshire Music Festival history, has given conductor Munch a farewell surpassing those tendered him during the year in Boston and New York in emotional intensity. Thirteen years as director of the Boston Symphony and 12 as music director of the Berkshire Festival gave Charles Munch an opportunity to bring musical enrichment to many of our neighbors. The opportunity did not go unused.

Now 70, Conductor Munch will take a European vacation before returning to the United States and several appearances as guest conductor. He hands the baton of the Boston Symphony and the directorship of the Berkshire Festival to Erich Leinsdorf, who will need a combination of his great skill and good luck to successfully replace the departed leader.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

...sing Finale

...termination of 13 years of ...making with the Boston ...ny Orchestra on the part ...Munch.

...Munch will ever ...ltuous greeting ...

...Bailey of 9 Oakland St. ...

...Mccormack's Springfield concert. The ...sponsored by Springfield ...ay included stops in Chicopee ...

which he received stepped on stage or the fanatic applause which followed his great reading of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

He had at his command everything that anyone could ask for — four superb soloists, Donald Gramm, John McCollum, Adele Addison and Florence Kopleff; the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the finest chorus that the Music Center has produced in years.

Soaring Tones

To hear Adele Addison's pure tones soar over an ensemble was a joy to the ear. She was in superb voice and spirits.

Miss Kopleff's gorgeous instrument was shown to full advantage, and her supreme musicianship caused this contralto role to sound more meaningful than it often does.

I don't know how many times Donald Gramm has opened the Ninth Symphony, but I do know that each time I have heard him sing, he has shown a greater vocal command and musical approach to this music.

Brisk Pace

John McCullum, another veteran, is probably the best tenor of his ilk in this neck of the woods. There were a few moments of throaty singing, but for the most part the voice was free and projected clearly.

What is there to say about the Munch reading of this symphony that has not been said? He does not indulge in histrionics nor force the chorus and soloists beyond their vocal abilities.

To some this might mean a dull reading, but Munch takes a brisk pace which keeps the music moving. The tremendous build-up to the "Ode to Joy" is accomplished through skillful handling of dynamics, and it proved Sunday to be an awesome thing.

Fresh and Viril

To the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this music must seem old hat, but they played Sunday with a freshness, virility and enthusiasm, as if playing it for the first time.

I don't know what prompted Munch to open the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." Although Copland has been coupled with the greatest of composers, "Quiet City" did not seem to fit in.

It's not a very quiet city anyway, but unlike many of the Copland works, it has some melodic virtue.

Whatever the virtues of much of the music that has been heard here this season, it has drawn a total audience of 217,290 and a total box office receipt of $546,894.50, approximately $13,000 more than the seven-week season last year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367

SEP

Charles Munch Conducts Last Performance

At Tanglewood last week, on an occasion distinguished by honest sentiment and by a sincere and long ovation by the capacity audience, Charles Munch brought to an end his long career as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the end of the ovation, a large laurel wreath was brought to the stage. White-haired, tall Mr. Munch placed his hand on his heart and said a final farewell to his orchestra by shaking hands with concertmaster Richard Burgin and cellist Richard Langendoen, who is also retiring.

Appropriately enough, Dr. Munch ended his 13-year Boston career with a rousing performance of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9," which ends, as all music-lovers know, with Schiller's "Ode to Joy." In this thrilling ode, Beethoven joins with Schiller to call for the brotherhood of all men under God. We suspect that Dr. Munch had a purpose in this final selection; he knows that never before in the history of the world has such a message been more needed.

For us, the departure of Dr. Munch, to be succeeded this month by Erich Leinsdorf, is like the loss of an old and valued friend. We have reviewed many of his concerts during his 13 year tenure and have always been impressed by his dedication and by his particular affinity for French music, notably that of Debussy and Berlioz.

We have always been impressed, too, by his kindliness: more than one Boston Symphony player has told us that Dr. Munch is an ideal man for whom to work—sympathetic, understanding, compassionate.

During Dr. Munch's 13 years with the orchestra, he presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 58 U. S. premieres. In addition, under Dr. Munch the Boston Smyphony became the first American orchestra to visit Russia. Dr. Munch also led the Boston Symphony on tours of other European countries and of Japan. During Dr. Munch's tenure the orchestra received two American International Music Fund awards, honors from the American Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, nine Grand Prix des Disques, and the medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Although he is retiring from the Boston Symphony, Dr. Munch will not be idle. He will return next season to Boston as a guest conductor and he will also appear in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Washington, D. C. He will also direct the French National Orchestra on its guest-conducting assignments in Montreux, Prague, Vienna, Brussels, Madrid, Tokyo, London, Rome, Florence, Turin, Berlin, Buenos Aires and Australia. It is good to know that he will continue to make music.

HERE AND THERE—Vincent Sheehan will edit a portion of the late Dorothy Thompson's letters and diaries dealing with her marriage to Sinclair Lewis . . . Kathryn Grayson is being sought to take over the female lead in the Broadway edition of "Camelot," beginning Oct. 22 . . . Magaret Leighton is leaving the cast of "Night of the Iguana" to co-star with Anthony Quinn in "Tchin-Tchin."

The New York Woodwind Quartet is touring Southeast Asia under State Department auspices . . . Bobby Vinton's record of "Roses Are Red" has just passed the 1,000,000 mark in sales . . . Bill Cullen, Cleveland Amory, and Everett B. Morris (formerly of New Bedford) will narrate the NBC-TV news special on Sept. 22 on America's Cup . . . NBC owns 25 percent of the forthcoming Richard Rodgers-Alan Jay Lerner Broadway musical . . . Rodgers, incidentally, will be paid $150,000 for writing the score for the new film, "Lawrence of Arabia" . . . Top film at the box office at present is "Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm" . . . The screen version of Gore Vidal's play, "The Best Man," will be produced by United Artists.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
... NEW YORK SERVICE

... DEMOCRAT CHRONICLE
... August 27, 1962

... NEWS BUREAU
... ALBANY, N.Y.
... NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
... NEW YORK SERVICE
... August 27, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 27 1962

PHOENIX, ARIZ.
ARIZONA JOURNAL
D. 50,000 S. 50,000
AUG 27 1962

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 283,195 SAT. 206,930
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
AUG 27 1962

Cheers as Munch Ends Career With Boston Symphony

LENOX, (UPI) — Charles Munch's baton lay silent today.

The master ended a 13-year career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

With the vitality of a man half his years, the white-haired Munch conducted the orchestra through a rousing reading of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Then he touched his heart and walked off the stage.

A crowd of 15,000 music lovers at Tanglewood swarmed down the aisles and stood before the conductor's platform. They cheered and applauded for a full 10 minutes.

Munch returned for a bow, waved softly, and then was gone.

Only Serge Koussevitsky, who conducted the Boston Symphony for 25 years, had led the orchestra longer than Munch.

As music director, Munch presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 58 United States premieres.

Munch will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera. Leinsdorf will begin rehearsals Sept. 17.

Munch will return next season as guest conductor in Boston but his long reign on the conductor's platform has ended.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Circ. 4,110
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 11,969
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,193
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,755

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610
AUG 27 1962

Munch Is Hailed At Final Concert

LENOX, (AP) — An audience of 15,300 gave Charles Munch an emotional 10-minute ovation yesterday in his final appearance after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience, cheering, yelling and whistling, recalled the 70-year-old conductor six times after a Tanglewood Festival performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

Munch, looking damp and rumpled after the exacting choral work, was visibly moved by the reception. Just before he was called back for the last time, a laurel wreath on a stand was brought to the stage. The ribbon was marked "To Charles Munch. Thank You." The wreath came from the orchestra trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf takes command of the orchestra in the fall but Munch has been invited to return for four weeks as guest conductor.

Munch left for New York after the concert to fly to Paris today.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 285,024 SAT 293,178
AUG 27 1962

15,300 at Tanglewood Give Munch Big Tribute, Farewell

By JOHN DWYER
Buffalo News Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 27—A standing audience of 15,300 shouted and applauded, waved handkerchiefs and wept in an extraordinary tribute to conductor Charles Munch Sunday afternoon in the Berkshire Music Festival shed.

Dr. Munch's baton came to rest on the closing chord of the great Beethoven Ninth "Choral" Symphony, and with it he closed his 13-year directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA, in an unusually keyed-up and dramatic mood, the festival choir and singers of Montreal University, soprano Adelle Addisson, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and bass Donald Gramm put their all into the monumental work.

Preceded by a sensitive reading of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," with its mystic horn and woodwind episodes, the Beethoven symphony seemed to have even more size and grandeur, in contrast with the allusive and impressionistic opening piece.

On any other occasion, with any other ensemble on stage, one might have quarreled with the reckless drive and rush of the scherzo and the pace of the choral finale.

* * *

BUT EVERYONE'S PULSE was running high on this occasion, a moving valedictory for a distinguished world musician. He will make guest appearances in the major music capitals, of course, and even return to Tanglewood for concerts. But with this concert, his directorship ceased and an era passed. It was an intense and touching moment.

The combined choruses shared the emotional charge and sang out the declamatory, joyous phrases of the Schiller "Ode to Joy" with unusual drive and rhythmic impact.

The quartet of soloists, given the most difficult, least singable roles in the whole Beethoven work, performed their ungrateful task with valor.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE extended itself in applause for the orchestra in its closing festival program, the chorus and soloists. But, in truth, their eyes and hearts were turned, first and last, to the quiet, introspective Alsatian maestro on the podium.

Dr. Munch came back again and again in company of the soloists, but the audience would not leave until he appeared, also time and again on his own.

The gray, patrician conductor carried it off with great calm and charm. But on his final long walk from center stage to the side door, the handkerchief that had been gently patting his brow went to his eyes.

It was an historic chapter ending in the history of a great orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf will succeed Dr. Munch.

WARREN, PA.
OBSERVER
D. 8,479
AUG 28 1962

End of An Era For The Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND ERICSON
(c) New York Times Service

LENOX, Mass.—The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival came to an end Sunday afternoon, and with it the end of an era for the Boston Symphony orchestra. The occasion was the final appearance of Charles Munch as conductor of the orchestra, a post he has held for 13 years.

Munch, who has won the great affection of Bostonians and of the crowds who come each summer to Tanglewood for the Berkshire Festival, has been receiving tributes and ovations from audiences ever since the beginning of the orchestra's season last fall, when it was learned that he was leaving. But the loudest cheers and applause to greet the conductor must have come from Sunday afternoon's audience if only because of its size—15,300 people.

The cheers grew in intensity each time Munch came out for a bow at the end of the concert. A large laurel wreath, a tribute from the orchestra, was brought to the center of the stage. On the ribbon was the simple inscription: "To Charles Munch With Thanks." As is his custom, the conductor made no speeches and allowed none. But he was obviously moved by the audience reaction.

Despite the size of the audience, it was not a record-breaking one. Two concerts led by Munch in 1951 and 1955 have drawn larger crowds, of 15,800 and 15,600 respectively. The total attendance for the eight weeks of the 1962 festival was approximately 217,500, as opposed to 210,400 for seven weeks in 1961.

Sunday afternoon's concert was devoted primarily to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the work with which Munch ended the season in Boston. The soloists were almost identical with those he had used earlier; Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. The chorus was that of the Berkshire Festival, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, augmented by the University of Montreal chorus, which is directed by Fernand Graton.

The symphony was prefaced by Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," in which Roger Voisin was the trumpet soloist and Louis Speyer the English horn soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

AUG 27 1962

15,300 Say Farewell at Lenox

Munch Gets Vast Ovation

By ROBERT TAYLOR

LENOX—With the shouts of an audience of 15,300 swirling against the Berkshire Hills, Charles Munch Sunday appeared before the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last time as its Music Director.

CHARLES MUNCH

Emotion-Crammed Occasion

In an emotion-crammed farewell reminiscent of the great French conductor's goodbye to Boston last April, Dr. Munch, 70, conducted the Beethoven Ninth, charged with youthful dynamism. The vast audience gave him a 10-minute ovation.

It swarmed down the aisles of the Berkshire Music Shed and stood densely packed before the conductor's platform. People climbed on chairs and waved handkerchiefs.

A tidal flood of homage engulfed the orchestra, the chorus and the soloists. And each appearance of Dr. Munch touched off a crescendo of applause.

He was visibly moved by the demonstration. Once again he shared the applause with Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, and the cellist, Jacobus Langendoen who are retiring simultaneously after nearly a half century of service. Once again an immense wreath bearing the inscription: "Charles Munch-Thank You," was trundled forth. Once again the audience's tumult proved deafening.

(Continued on Page Eight)

On this soft Berkshire afternoon, paying heed to the musical values of the concert was difficult; yet even in the galvanic atmosphere of parting these projected vividly. Perhaps Dr. Munch has conducted better Ninths from a detached point of view, but none so intimately filled with his lifetime experience and imprint.

Munch

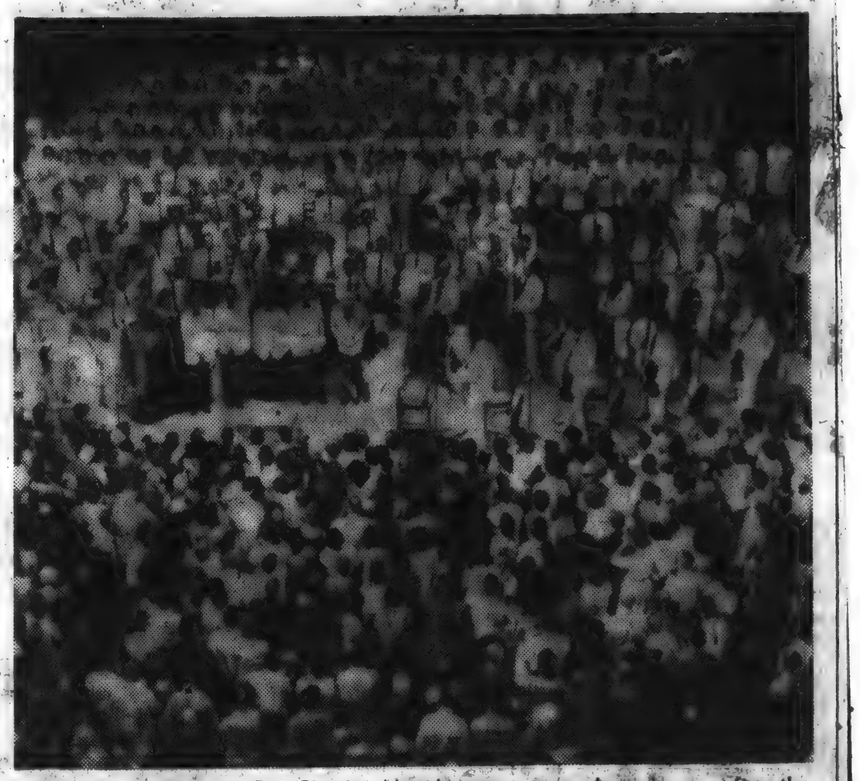
The orchestra played, as usual, splendidly. The soloists, Adele Addison, soprano, John McCollum, tenor, Florence Kopleff, contralto and Donald Gramm, baritone, sang with commendable ensemble and solo distinction. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Paterson, and the University of Montreal Chorus, prepared by Ferdinand Grafon, mustered an impressive volume and their tonal quality was excellent.

Throughout the reading, however, flickered the personality of Dr. Charles Munch. He obviously conceived the Ninth as an exciting affair, but the detail of the performance was precise and luminous. One particularly liked the preparation of the slow movement and the graphic contrast of the finale. For this was a Ninth into which the conductor poured his heart; the score transpired on this edge of rhetoric. It had grandeur and force, and few who heard Dr. Munch in his finale concert will forget its climax.

NOTABLE SOLO

The concert began with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City", a score created at the Berkshire Center and which featured the silvery vibrato of Roger Voisin's trumpet and the smoothly-payed tone of the English horn of Louis Speyer. Theirs was a notable solo contribution.

"Quiet City" seemed chosen for its melancholy and plaintive contrast to the Ninth. The wistful lyricism in a way summed up one's feelings; but so did the heroic Beethoven. The Munch years are over. They will not be forgotten.



THE LAST HURRAH—Dr. Charles Munch, center stage, bows in accepting the final applause from 15,300 enthusiasts at Tanglewood yesterday. Munch ended 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony amid much adulation.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 27 1962

Munch Retires With Tanglewood Finale

TANGLEWOOD CROWD SWARMS AFTER MUNCH—With the last bars of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Sunday afternoon, a record crowd poured into the vast music shed at Tanglewood to pay tribute to retiring conductor Charles Munch with a 10-minute ovation. A few of the very persistent congregated outside his dressing room door for a last glimpse before aides ushered him to his car. Smiling, waving, and saying "Thank you" to the die-hard cheering section, he disappeared into the back seat to begin the trip to his home in France, ending 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Just behind is the special travel van of WGBH-TV (Channel 2, Boston) which recorded the weekend's concerts.

Vast Ovation Is Given Munch

(Continued from First Page)

But this occasion was different: the end of 13 years, which have included four global tours and 12 Tanglewood seasons. Although Dr. Munch will return as guest conductor next year at the invitation of his successor, Eric Leinsdorf, although he will be heard as the guest conductor of the French Radio Diffusion Orchestra during its national tour next season, an era of glory reached ultimate conclusion this afternoon.

From the vibrant air of intensity that marked his slightest movement, Dr. Munch seemed conscious of this fact, too. When the final swell of Beethoven's Ode to Joy faded from the air, he turned to the audience, wiped his eyes, then stalked quickly to the wing only to be recalled by the churning cheers and the clapping.

On this soft Berkshire afternoon, paying heed to the musical values of the concert was difficult; yet even in the galvanic atmosphere of parting these projected vividly. Perhaps Dr. Munch has conducted better Ninths from a detached point of view, but none so intimately filled with his lifetime experience and imprint.

The orchestra played, as usual, splendidly. The soloists, Adele Addison, soprano, John McCollum, tenor, Florence Kopleff, contralto and Donald Gramm, baritone, sang with commendable ensemble and solo distinction. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Paterson, and the University of Montreal Chorus, prepared by Ferdinand Grafton, mustered an impressive volume and their tonal quality was excellent.

Throughout the reading, however, flickered the personality of Dr. Charles Munch. He obviously conceived the Ninth as an exciting affair, but the detail of the performance was precise and luminous. One particularly liked the preparation of the slow movement and the graphic contrast of the finale. For this was a Ninth into which the conductor poured his heart; the score transpired on this edge of rhetoric. It had grandeur and force, and few who heard Dr. Munch in his finale concert will forget its climax.

NOTABLE SOLO

The concert began with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City", a score created at the Berkshire Center and which featured the silvery vibrato of Roger Voisin's trumpet and the smoothly-payed tone of the English horn of Louis Speyer. Theirs was a notable solo contribution.

"Quiet City" seemed chosen for its melancholy and plaintive contrast to the Ninth. The wistful lyricism in a way summed up one's feelings; but so did the heroic Beethoven. The Munch years are over. They will not be forgotten.

THE LAST HURRAH—Dr. Charles Munch, center stage, bows in accepting the final applause from 15,300 enthusiasts at Tanglewood yesterday. Munch ended 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony amid much adulation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 27 1962

Munch Retires With Tanglewood Finale

TANGLEWOOD CROWD SWARMS AFTER MUNCH—With the last bars of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Sunday afternoon, a record crowd poured into the vast music shed at Tanglewood to pay tribute to retiring conductor Charles Munch with a 10-minute ovation. A few of the very persistent congregated outside his dressing room door for a last glimpse before aides ushered him to his car. Smiling, waving, and saying "Thank you" to the die-hard cheering section, he disappeared into the back seat to begin the trip to his home in France, ending 13 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Just behind is the special travel van of WGBH-TV (Channel 2, Boston) which recorded the weekend's concerts.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Monday, August 27, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
AUBURN, N.Y.
CITIZEN-ADVERTISER
D. 12 226
PAGE ONE
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,881
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,767
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,197
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158
AUG 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
AUG 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 16,711
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,488
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,431
AUG 27 1962

Crowd Sad At Farewell For Munch

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — Charles Munch's baton lay silent today.

The master ended a 13-year career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday.

With the vitality of a man half his years, the white-haired Munch, who will be 71 next month, conducted the orchestra through a rousing reading of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Then he touched his heart and walked off the stage.

A crowd of 15,000 music lovers at Tanglewood swarmed down the aisles and stood before the conductor's platform. They cheered and applauded for a full 10 minutes.

Munch returned for a bow, waved softly, and then was gone.

Only Serge Koussevitsky, who conducted the Boston Symphony for 25 years, had led the orchestra longer than Munch.

As music director, Munch presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 38 United States premieres.

Munch will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera. Leinsdorf will begin rehearsals Sept. 17.

Munch will return next season as guest conductor in Boston but his long reign on the conductor's platform has ended.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
AUG 30 1962

Boston Symphony Made New Records

Attendance And Income At All-Time High

Dr. Charles Munch Retires As Music Director After 13 Years.—Full Orchestra Presented 15 Concerts On Five Week Ends.—Eleven Members Appeared As Soloists.

During its 27th season at Tanglewood in Lenox, which closed Sunday night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra set a number of new records. It played to an attendance of 217,642 patrons during the eight-week season and ticket sales totaled $546,894. This compared with an attendance of 210,438 and ticket sales of $533,136 during the seven-week 1961 season.

The Sunday night concert also marked the end of the 13-year career of Dr. Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony.

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra presented 15 concerts on five week ends; a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony presented three concerts of the music of Bach and six of the music of Mozart on the first three week ends of the Berkshire Festival. Dr. Munch conducted the nine Bach-Mozart concerts with the full orchestra. Among his guest conductors were Pierre Monteux (four concerts), Eugene Ormandy (two concerts), and William Steinberg. Three composers, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss, and Leon Kirchner, conducted their own compositions.

Dr. Munch, in a personal tribute to the orchestra, invited 11 players of the Boston Symphony to appear as soloists. These included: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Samuel Mayes, Joseph Silverstein, Louis Speyer, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Other soloists who appeared at the 1962 Berkshire Festival concerts in-

New Records Turn to page 10

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

Conductor, Critic Retire

Charles Munch, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 13 years, and Willard M. Clark, right, music critic for The Union the past 41 years, retired together Sunday after the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The picture was taken at a retirement dinner for Munch Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 27 1962

Notes and Footnotes

SMALL TALK: Such a crush a Tanglewood after Charles Muncl led his final concert as Bosto Symphony Orchestra director tha Mr. Munch himself was caught i traffic jam in the parking lo yesterday afternoon. His chauf feured Lincoln sedan becalme in a line of cars, and bevy of girl about to board a bus marke "University of Montreal" clus tered round him for autographs chattering in French. He obliged seemed pleased to hear his nativ tongue, but finally had to clos car window or be mobbed . . .

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
SEP 4 1962

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music Festival, which concluded on Aug. 26 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., drew a total attendance at the festival concerts of 174,563 for the eight-week season.

In addition 28,080 persons attended the open rehearsals for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund and another 15,099 persons attended the Berkshire Music Center benefits.

The grand total attendance added up to 217,642 with ticket sales for the season coming to $546,894.50.

There were 3,533 Friends memberships this year with Friends contributions totaling $25,240.

Alumni contributions to the Berkshire Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund totaled $5,110 from 106 alumni.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D: 954,085 S. 1,157,232
SEP 2 1962

Attendance at the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., dropped from an average of 30,057 a week last season to 27,187 this season. This season's eight weeks of concerts drew about 217,500; last year's seven weeks drew 210,400. Charles Munch's final concert last week-end drew 15,300, third highest gate in festival history.

Charles Munch

• • •

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Monday, August 27, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise
LEOMINSTER
Circ. 4,88
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,767
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,197
AUG 27 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Monday, August 27, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NIAGARA FALLS TIMES
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,431
AUG 27 1962

Crowd Sad At Farewell For Munch

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — Charles Munch's baton lay silent today.

The master ended a 13-year career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday.

With the vitality of a man half his years, the white-haired Munch who will be 71 next month, conducted the orchestra through a rousing reading of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Then he touched his heart and walked off the stage.

A crowd of 15,000 music lovers at Tanglewood swarmed down the aisles and stood before the conductor's platform. They cheered and applauded for a full 10 minutes.

Munch returned for a bow, waved softly, and then was gone.

Only Serge Koussevitsky, who conducted the Boston Symphony for 25 years, had led the orchestra longer than Munch.

As music director, Munch presented 168 contemporary works, including 39 world premieres and 38 United States premieres.

Munch will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera. Leinsdorf will begin rehearsals Sept. 17.

Munch will return next season as guest conductor in Boston but his long reign on the conductor's platform has ended.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158
AUG 29 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
AUG 28 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 16,711
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,488
AUG 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

Conductor, Critic Retire

Charles Munch, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 13 years, and Willard M. Clark, right, music critic for The Union the past 41 years, retired together Sunday after the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The picture was taken at a retirement dinner for Munch Saturday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 27 1962

Notes and Footnotes

SMALL TALK: Such a crush a Tanglewood after Charles Munch led his final concert as Boston Symphony Orchestra director that Mr. Munch himself was caught in traffic jam in the parking lot yesterday afternoon. His chauffeured Lincoln sedan becalmed in a line of cars, and bevy of girls about to board a bus marked "University of Montreal" clustered round him for autographs, chattering in French. He obliged, seemed pleased to hear his native tongue, but finally had to close car window or be mobbed . . .

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
SEP 4 1962

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music Festival, which concluded on Aug. 26 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., drew a total attendance at the festival concerts of 174,563 for the eight-week season.

In addition 28,080 persons attended the open rehearsals for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund and another 15,099 persons attended the Berkshire Music Center benefits.

The grand total attendance added up to 217,642 with ticket sales for the season coming to $546,894.50.

There were 3,533 Friends memberships this year with Friends contributions totaling $25,240.

Alumni contributions to the Berkshire Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund totaled $5,110 from 106 alumni.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D: 954,085 S. 1,157,232
SEP 2 1962

Attendance at the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., dropped from an average of 30,057 a week last season to 27,187 this season. This season's eight weeks of concerts drew about 217,500; last year's seven weeks drew 210,400. Charles Munch's final concert last week-end drew 15,300, third highest gate in festival history.

Charles Munch

• • •

152

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 165,682
SEP 2 1962

The Lively Arts —

Tanglewood '62

By T. H. Parker

When the Berkshire Music Festival and the tenure of Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to a roaring close at Tanglewood last Sunday, the BSO press staff was on the job gathering news right up to the bitter end.

The last nickel had hardly been rung up in the box office, and the last ticket stub torn at the gate, before the boys in PRO had complete summaries of the 1962 festival, and a comparison with 1961, run off and in the hands of the reviewers and other newsmen.

Such mettlesome service cannot be filed in Deep 6, though statistics are sometimes dull and their interpretation tricky. Before examining them, it should be remembered that the festival season was extended to eight weeks this year over 1961's seven. The number of main concerts in the Shed remained at 15, but the chamber-orchestra performances rose from six to nine and the Wednesday chamber music events gained by one.

★

What the figures seem to show is that attendance at the main concerts slid off from last year's 126,000 to 117,000. On the other hand, the Bach and Mozart concerts — roughly 13,000 for each of the two series in 1961 — drew 14,000 and 15,000 for the first two series this year, and practically 17,000 for the additional series.

One might conclude from this that interest in the smaller forms of music (and at Tanglewood identifiable with the more esoteric) is drawing ahead of symphonic fare at the festival.

This is of course to the good in that it probably demonstrates a corresponding expansion in the musical horizons of audiences. This is a new maturity devoutly to be wished. It will perhaps appear to the entrenched music fancier that music is music whether played by a quartet or the full 110 musicians of the Boston Symphony. The facts of life are however that less experienced esthetes incline to imagine a difference.

And in all fairness let us admit that comparatively speaking there was twice as much contemporary music played at the Wednesday chamber performances as in the main, Shed events. Eleven modern numbers were given at each series, except that there were only eight ensemble programs compared to 15 full orchestra.

But that these more abstruse programs, together with Bach and Mozart, continue to draw larger audiences is certainly a most heartening inference to be drawn from the 1962 Festival summary.

The programing for the big symphony series is still not adventurous. Of 44 works performed, 33 were from the standard repertoire (to use the term loosely) and 11 were described as contemporary. This averages about one so-called modern work per program. This is not bad, but it sounds better than it is. For most of the contemporary works listed were by now almost as familiar as the standard compositions. In a sense it is now difficult to consider Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," Copland's "Quiet City," a Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, or the symphonies of Honegger and Prokofiev new adventures in music.

This observation is in no way to decry the grandeur of the great composers of the past, or the brilliance with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra can perform them. Nevertheless, it still would be stimulating if the orchestra would premiere more works at Tanglewood, instead of contenting itself with contemporary offerings from which the newness has evaporated.

There is one changing aspect at Tanglewood that is out-and-out distressing, and it has to do with the people who attend. The stuffy, dowager days and the era of the bon-ton have long since passed at the festival. One does not deny that these fancier folk probably liked music, but it is agreeable enough that informality has replaced the former aura of social eclat.

★

By the same token, one must allow that those thousands of persons who now attend in shorts with shirttails out doubtless like music also. But it would be nice if they listened to it, too, instead of incessantly wandering over the lawns while the orchestra is playing, gabbling together, and imparting an aspect of Coney Island to the Sunday afternoon concerts.

Most of all, the festival management should put a stop to the litterbugging. When the crowds had departed last week the magnificent lawns had been turned into a pig pen. There was rubbish as far as the eye could see — programs, newspapers, lunch cartons, remnants of food, cigarette litter, ice cream boxes, potato-chip bags all strewn about ankle deep. It was disgusting not only to look at, but to contemplate as public manners. The price of admission may include a certain sloppiness of costume. That sloppiness at least disappears with the wearer. The mess of litter remains behind not only to be laboriously cleaned up, but to cast a melancholy suspicion on the mentality of those who created it under pretensions of being one with the refinement of a musical experience.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 29 1962

Maestro, Farewell and Hail

AN ERA CLOSED at Tanglewood when Dr. Charles Munch brought down his baton for the last time as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

But a new era will open shortly when Erich Leinsdorf assumes direction of the great orchestra. Leinsdorf, who has conducted the Rochester Philharmonic, the Cleveland Symphony, the New York Metropolitan, the New York City Center, the Salzburg, and other famed orchestras on both sides of the Atlantic, is a distinguished successor to Dr. Munch and the late Serge Koussevitsky.

IT WILL BE exciting to watch Leinsdorf in action in one of the music world's choicest and most challenging posts. Critics say that he is "equally at home" with Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, Strauss, Stravinsky, and the modern composers. According to reports, he plans to conduct eight or nine contemporary concertos during his first season in Boston.

There is always a thrill of anticipation when an old king steps down to be followed by a new one. But the

Charles Munch

13 years that Dr. Munch spent in Boston will not be soon forgotten. His leonine mane, and his tender gestures as he presided over some soft passage from Debussy, Ravel, or Berlioz, all of which he interpreted to perfection, marked him as a true maestro.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
AUG 25 1962

Music: Sun Sets, and Tanglewood Is Transformed

Avant-Garde Yields to Standard Program

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 24— As the Berkshire Music Festival entered its final week-end of concerts today, two events took place on the grounds of Tanglewood that illustrated the range and emphasis of musical activity here.

This afternoon avant-garde chamber works were played in the Theatre-Concert Hall before a small audience, a concert that would not have been possible without outside sponsorship. This evening a huge audience filled the Music Shed to hear the superb and glamorous-sounding Boston Symphony Orchestra play standard repertory works.

The evening concert included Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe"; Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" Symphony, a twentieth-century work that has become a familiar concert item, and Brahms' First Symphony.

●

The 87-year-old Pierre Monteux, who was guest conductor of the evening, toddled briskly to the podium in his inimitable fashion to lead performances that sounded as spry and youthful as if he were one-third his age. The Weber overture was bristling with vigor, and the orchestra played it for all it was worth, the acoustical shell adding to the booming effect of the whole.

M. Monteux's way with the Hindemith was less sober than the composer's, but the brilliance and élan he brought to the score did it no harm. In fact it enhanced it by adding a degree of sensuousness to the orchestral colors. The "angelic concert" has probably never sounded so happy, and the sonorous gleam that the Boston Symphony gave to the music was properly seraphic.

The performance of the Brahms symphony continued in the style M. Monteux had set for the German-Austrian program. The flow of the music was steady and natural, the textures of the orchestra was clear, all possible ponderousness was elminated.

The interpretation was further testimony to the conductor's reasonable, yet joyous, view of music.

Pierre Monteux

As satisfying and inspiring as the evening concert was, it could not erase memories of the afternoon concert, with its emphasis on microscopic sounds and its investigation of the new and strange. Keeping up with contemporary composition movements is a necessary function of a place like Tanglewood, where young musicians come to study every summer; one wonders if this afternoon's program was not more important in the long run than what took place in the evening.

Certainly, it is encouraging that such avant-garde music was heard here, and yet it forms a less important part of the schedule than it should. And it must be remembered that without the sponsorship of the Fromm Music Foundation, a Chicago-based organizatoin, the event probably would not have taken place.

MUSIC MAGAZINE
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 10,000
OCT 1962

Tanglewood

The Tanglewood story this year was one of fond farewell and wait-and-see. The fond farewell came, unfortunately, when I was not there. It marked the end of an era, the final appearance of Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had seen the orchestra through 13 seasons, and now he was making way for a new regime, undoubtedly a less leisurely and more exacting one under Erich Leinsdorf.

The farewell concert—for your memory books—included Copland's Quiet City and the majestic Ninth Symphony of Beethoven with Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, and Donald Gramm. For the memory of Charles Munch there were the cheers of 15,300 persons and a laurel wreath from the orchestra inscribed so simply and yet so deeply: "To Charles Munch With Thanks." He deserves the thanks; he is a great musician of our time.

The records speak of good crowds and a great variety of music, including 79 contemporary works and much Beethoven, Bach, and Mozart. But they do not always attest to festival conditions. One program by the Boston Symphony —which I heard—included Debussy's Printemps, Piston's Symphony Number Six, and Brahms' Symphony Number Four. The first two were brilliantly played, the last less so. But the major critical question is: does such a program fit into festival conditions, particularly if surrounded by more of the same construction?

Mr. Munch and the orchestra's managers have moved the winter repertoire outdoors, invited some guest conductors, and called it a festival. Good music making, yes; festival, no. There were no unifying themes, no concentrations on a composer or a school of composers. From day to day one could hear much of value at Tanglewood, but it differed not from what can be heard in Boston or New York or Chicago or San Francisco or Cleveland throughout the long winter season.

At Tanglewood one starts with a beautiful setting and the marvelously mellow sound of a magnificent orchestra. What more is needed is festival guidance at the helm, and for this there is a wait-and-see attitude with Leinsdorf about to step in. Munch is an outstanding conductor but a comfortable one—and the Boston-Tanglewood scene, apparently, can use a little discomfort, a bit of tingling of the spines. Perhaps Leinsdorf is the man.

Leinsdorf also takes over the Berkshire Music Center, that allied enterprise for the use and good of students. (This combination of professional festival and professional school as found at Tanglewood was witnessed elsewhere on the editor's tour, and it is an important development that sets off America's summer music making from Europe's.) Some have said that the Berkshire Music Center also needs reshuffling and a focus. I cannot judge from my brief visit although three public concerts by students seemed a rather heavy schedule for a two-day period, and that's what I heard. A chamber music department concert found its highlight in Brahms' Sonata in F major warmly performed by a talented, young cellist, Raphael Sommer.

The Tanglewood Choir turned out a difficult program of Gabrielli, Croce, Poulenc, Castellini, Schein, Brahms, and Thomson. The Brahms Gypsy Songs were a pleasure and sounded like forerunners to The Gypsy Baron or Countess Maritza. But then Brahms appreciated the Viennese operetta, particularly the special genius of Johann Strauss. Remember when Brahms was asked for an autograph by Strauss' third wife? He jotted down the first bars of the Blue Danube with the words: "Unfortunately not by Johannes Brahms."

A seminar concert in contemporary music featured some new Polish compositions. Major interest fell on Five Songs for Voice and Piano by visiting composer Witold Lutoslawski. The songs are described as for children with a simple musical texture and musical language. I'm not sure what children would be attracted. Soprano Linda Sanford showed musicality in grasping the tunelessness.

Highlight for me of the visit to Tanglewood was a two-hour excursion into composition with the combined classes of Iain Hamilton, Lukas Foss, and Witold Lutoslawski. They spoke in complex terms of density, structural interest, rarification of texture, balance of unit and content, tonality and counterpoint, aural and visual logic. But even for the novice there was much that could be understood. Teachers and students spoke of the search for identity and direction which the modern composer faces each time he takes up pen.

Lukas Foss said: "Every time I start, it's as if I'm a beginner again. But somehow it all comes together." And he spoke of Hindemith and that composer's "moment when every blade of grass is seen" —when the landscape is illumined as if by lightning; so a composer comes to his creative idea and formulates that idea into notes on paper. And Foss spoke also of Stockhausen and that far-outer's idea of formlessness in music—the stringing together of moments, the stringing together of eyes without arms or legs—that music is the stringing together of highlights.

Hamilton, the Britisher now on the staff of Duke University, said: "We are very concerned with reassessment. This is an exciting time to write. But we must not write to please others instead of ourselves. To do so is abdication. The composer must be opinionated, intolerant, serious, concerned—as one is when one is young."

Lutoslawski said (in French, translated into English by Foss): "Students need more contact with the new as well as the old in music. The student should not merely rebel against fashion, blindly. He should know all, then start out on his carefully-chosen path. There will be a public if the composer has something to say."

And Foss again: "Take the Theatre of the Absurd which makes sense with nonsense. Why not the same in music? I have found that very suddenly one will be presented with something new; that we take in an extra dimension; that our artistic language is expanded. Music has moved from Bach to Mozart to Wagner to Sacre —each bringing discoveries. Why not more discoveries today? This is the excitement of living. What was chaotic suddenly seems true."

183

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
AUG 26 1962

Music: Conductor Munch Given an Ovation

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's concert at Tanglewood was the next-to-the-last conducted by Charles Munch before his retirement after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was an occasion of personal triumph for the 71-year-old conductor.

He received a rousing reception from an audience of 10,336. So did the orchestra which has rarely played with such zest and conspicuous determination to please the leader.

Yesterday was a taxing day for Munch. In the morning, he conducted an open rehearsal of his final program to be given this afternoon. There was an audience of 5,156.

No Interruption

Never before have we heard the Boston Symphony and Festival chorus go through Beethoven's Ninth Symphony without a single interruption. This was not out of courtesy to four television cameramen who recorded the scene.

Munch seemed ecstatic with what he heard.

Last night's music was Munch's "specialty." The program: Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony, Debussys "La Mer," and the second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite by Ravel.

There have been times when valid issue could be taken with Munch over his interpretations of classic and some contemporary repertory. His treatment of French romantic and impressionistic music, as heard last night, stands for authority.

Conclusive Proof

The real proof was most conclusive in the "Fantastic's" least gratifying movement, "Scene in the Meadow." The beautiful English horn and oboe duet (marvelously played last night by Louis Speyer and Ralph Gomberg) aren't enough to dispel the gloom of Berlioz' meanderings. Neither is the pseudo-dramatic storm sequence at the end. Munch brought pictorial vitality to the entire drama. The waltz movement, "A Ball," had Straussian lilt, plus technical splurge. It impressed us that "March to the Scaffold" was bereft of veneer but played, rather, as the sardonic ritual that Berlioz intended.

Even less "genteel" was the "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath," which Munch caused to rant and rave without restriction.

The entire work was a dazzling portrayal of Berlioz' narcotic visions.

Unusual Program

The summer's most "unusual" program was given Friday afternoon for friends of the Berkshire Music Center in the theater-concert hall.

Called "Aspects of Music," the program consisted of recent American and European works with some of the composers on hand to explain or justify their products.

It was called "the most advanced program we have ever had at Tanglewood" by Lukas Foss, acting head of the Center's composition department. Probably nowhere in the world does "fresh from the loom" music receive less peevish listening than at Tanglewood. The program opened with the coda fom Irving Fine's Partita for Wind Quintet. The composer had died the previous day.

Balance of the works were by composers in front of the "avant garde" movement. In all cases, there seemed to be a forfeiture of form and every phase of tradition, in the interest of sound.

One of these works was so-defined by composer Morton Feldman. The title: "For Franz Kline," with scoring for piano, horn, violin, chimes, cello and soprano.

All of it was done in a sequence of hushed sounds, with performers establishing their own time values. The results were quite beautiful — an array of mystical effects, leisure, euphonious and original.

Linda Sanford was the attractive soprano who produced theremin-type sounds with the wordless text. Her tone was pure and sensitive. The ensemble created calculated but spontaneous effects.

The rest of the program came generally from the avant mold. Ralph Shapey's "Five Pieces From Evocation" was a jarring trip—primitive, violent, and featuring hammered clusters from piano.

One was hard put to discover a continuous melodic phrase of reasonable length in Howard Hersh's "Quartet."

Paul Jacobs played an "Etude" by Stockhausen, reading from a gigantic one-page score. The performer was instructed to "begin, continue and end at any point."

Cacophony's crowning glory was Earl Brown's "Available Forms No. 3." It consists of four pages of score with five formulas on each. The conductor selected them at random. The responding chamber group sounded like a cross between an aviary and the popular misconception of hades.

Farewell Program

This afternoon, Munch ends his 13-year tenure as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program:

Copland's "Quiet City," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. For the Beethoven, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by the student chorus of Montreal's University. Soloists are Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McAllum and Donald Gramm.

MUSIC MAGAZINE
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 10,000
OCT 1962

Tanglewood

The Tanglewood story this year was one of fond farewell and wait-and-see. The fond farewell came, unfortunately, when I was not there. It marked the end of an era, the final appearance of Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had seen the orchestra through 13 seasons, and now he was making way for a new regime, undoubtedly a less leisurely and more exacting one under Erich Leinsdorf.

The farewell concert—for your memory books—included Copland's Quiet City and the majestic Ninth Symphony of Beethoven with Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, and Donald Gramm. For the memory of Charles Munch there were the cheers of 15,300 persons and a laurel wreath from the orchestra inscribed so simply and yet so deeply: "To Charles Munch With Thanks." He deserves the thanks; he is a great musician of our time.

The records speak of good crowds and a great variety of music, including 79 contemporary works and much Beethoven, Bach, and Mozart. But they do not always attest to festival conditions. One program by the Boston Symphony —which I heard—included Debussy's Printemps, Piston's Symphony Number Six, and Brahms' Symphony Number Four. The first two were brilliantly played, the last less so. But the major critical question is: does such a program fit into festival conditions, particularly if surrounded by more of the same construction?

Mr. Munch and the orchestra's managers have moved the winter repertoire outdoors, invited some guest conductors, and called it a festival. Good music making, yes; festival, no. There were no unifying themes, no concentrations on a composer or a school of composers. From day to day one could hear much of value at Tanglewood, but it differed not from what can be heard in Boston or New York or Chicago or San Francisco or Cleveland throughout the long winter season.

At Tanglewood one starts with a beautiful setting and the marvelously mellow sound of a magnificent orchestra. What more is needed is festival guidance at the helm, and for this there is a wait-and-see attitude with Leinsdorf about to step in. Munch is an outstanding conductor but a comfortable one—and the Boston-Tanglewood scene, apparently, can use a little discomfort, a bit of tingling of the spines. Perhaps Leinsdorf is the man.

Leinsdorf also takes over the Berkshire Music Center, that allied enterprise for the use and good of students. (This combination of professional festival and professional school as found at Tanglewood was witnessed elsewhere on the editor's tour, and it is an important development that sets off America's summer music making from Europe's.) Some have said that the Berkshire Music Center also needs reshuffling and a focus. I cannot judge from my brief visit although three public concerts by students seemed a rather heavy schedule for a two-day period, and that's what I heard. A chamber music department concert found its highlight in Brahms' Sonata in F major warmly performed by a talented, young cellist, Raphael Sommer.

The Tanglewood Choir turned out a difficult program of Gabrielli, Croce, Poulenc, Castellini, Schein, Brahms, and Thomson. The Brahms Gypsy Songs were a pleasure and sounded like forerunners to The Gypsy Baron or Countess Maritza. But then Brahms appreciated the Viennese operetta, particularly the special genius of Johann Strauss. Remember when Brahms was asked for an autograph by Strauss' third wife? He jotted down the first bars of the Blue Danube with the words: "Unfortunately not by Johannes Brahms."

A seminar concert in contemporary music featured some new Polish compositions. Major interest fell on Five Songs for Voice and Piano by visiting composer Witold Lutoslawski. The songs are described as for children with a simple musical texture and musical language. I'm not sure what children would be attracted. Soprano Linda Sanford showed musicality in grasping the tunelessness.

Highlight for me of the visit to Tanglewood was a two-hour excursion into composition with the combined classes of Iain Hamilton, Lukas Foss, and Witold Lutoslawski. They spoke in complex terms of density, structural interest, rarification of texture, balance of unit and content, tonality and counterpoint, aural and visual logic. But even for the novice there was much that could be understood. Teachers and students spoke of the search for identity and direction which the modern composer faces each time he takes up pen.

Lukas Foss said: "Every time I start, it's as if I'm a beginner again. But somehow it all comes together." And he spoke of Hindemith and that composer's "moment when every blade of grass is seen" —when the landscape is illumined as if by lightning; so a composer comes to his creative idea and formulates that idea into notes on paper. And Foss spoke also of Stockhausen and that far-outer's idea of formlessness in music—the stringing together of moments, the stringing together of eyes without arms or legs—that music is the stringing together of highlights.

Hamilton, the Britisher now on the staff of Duke University, said: "We are very concerned with reassessment. This is an exciting time to write. But we must not write to please others instead of ourselves. To do so is abdication. The composer must be opinionated, intolerant, serious, concerned—as one is when one is young."

Lutoslawski said (in French, translated into English by Foss): "Students need more contact with the new as well as the old in music. The student should not merely rebel against fashion, blindly. He should know all, then start out on his carefully-chosen path. There will be a public if the composer has something to say."

And Foss again: "Take the Theatre of the Absurd which makes sense with nonsense. Why not the same in music? I have found that very suddenly one will be presented with something new; that we take in an extra dimension; that our artistic language is expanded. Music has moved from Bach to Mozart to Wagner to Sacre —each bringing discoveries. Why not more discoveries today? This is the excitement of living. What was chaotic suddenly seems true."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
AUG 26 1962

Music: Conductor Munch Given an Ovation

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's concert at Tanglewood was the next-to-the-last conducted by Charles Munch before his retirement after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was an occasion of personal triumph for the 71-year-old conductor.

He received a rousing reception from an audience of 10,336. So did the orchestra which has rarely played with such zest and conspicuous determination to please the leader.

Yesterday was a taxing day for Munch. In the morning, he conducted an open rehearsal of his final program to be given this afternoon. There was an audience of 5,156.

No Interruption

Never before have we heard the Boston Symphony and Festival chorus go through Beethoven's Ninth Symphony without a single interruption. This was not out of courtesy to four television cameramen who recorded the scene.

Munch seemed ecstatic with what he heard.

Last night's music was Munch's "specialty." The program: Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony, Debussys "La Mer," and the second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite by Ravel.

There have been times when valid issue could be taken with Munch over his interpretations of classic and some contemporary repertory. His treatment of French romantic and impressionistic music, as heard last night, stands for authority.

Conclusive Proof

The real proof was most conclusive in the "Fantastic's" least gratifying movement, "Scene in the Meadow." The beautiful English horn and oboe duet (marvelously played last night by Louis Speyer and Ralph Gomberg) aren't enough to dispel the gloom of Berlioz' meanderings. Neither is the pseudo-dramatic storm sequence at the end. Munch brought pictorial vitality to the entire drama. The third movement, "A Ball," had Straussian lilt, plus technical splurge. It impressed us that "March to the Scaffold" was bereft of veneer but played, rather, as the sardonic ritual that Berlioz intended.

Even less "genteel" was the "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath," which Munch caused to rant and rave without restriction.

The entire work was a dazzling portrayal of Berlioz' narcotic visions.

Unusual Program

The summer's most "unusual" program was given Friday afternoon for friends of the Berkshire Music Center in the theater-concert hall.

Called "[illegible] Music," the program consisted of recent American and European works with some of the composers on hand to explain or justify their products.

It was called "the most advanced program we have ever had at Tanglewood" by Lukas Foss, acting head of the Center's composition department. Probably nowhere in the world does "fresh from the loom" music receive less peevish listening than at Tanglewood. The program opened with the coda from Irving Fine's Partita for Wind Quintet. The composer had died the previous day.

Balance of the works were by composers in front of the "avant garde" movement. In all cases, there seemed to be a forfeiture of form and every phase of tradition, in the interest of sound.

One of these works was so-defined by composer Morton Feldman. The title: "For Franz Kline," with scoring for piano, horn, violin, chimes, cello and soprano.

All of it was done in a sequence of hushed sounds, with performers establishing their own time values. The results were quite beautiful — an array of mystical effects, leisure, euphonious and original.

Linda Sanford was the attractive soprano who produced theremin-type sounds with the wordless text. Her tone was pure and sensitive. The ensemble created calculated but spontaneous effects.

The rest of the program came generally from the [illegible] mold. Ralph Shapey's "[illegible]ve From Evocation" was a jarring trip—primitive, violent, and featuring hammered clusters from piano.

One was hard put to discover a continuous melodic phrase of reasonable length in Howard Hersh's "Quartet."

Paul Jacobs played an "Etude" by Stockhausen, reading from a gigantic one-page score. The performer was instructed to "begin, continue and end at any point."

Cacophony's crowning glory was Earl Brown's "Available Forms No. 3." It consists of four pages of score with five formulas on each. The conductor selected them at random. The responding chamber group sounded like a cross between an aviary and the popular misconception of hades.

Farewell Program

This afternoon, Munch ends his 13-year tenure as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program:

Copland's "Quiet City," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. For the Beethoven, the Festival Chorus will be augmented by the student chorus of Montreal's University. Soloists are Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McAllum and Donald Gramm.

154

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 1 1962

Whitestone Photo

Charles Munch acclaimed following his farewell concert at Tanglewood

Munch Farewell Crowns Tanglewood Season

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood, in its 27th year since the Boston Symphony first participated, is quite pleased with itself, in the face of some previous criticism, because of a distinct stiffening of its contemporary repertoire.

But the achievement for which this summer could well become historic has been, as the climax of Charles Munch's leave-taking as Boston Symphony conductor, the free ring of Beethoven's voice. The 15,000 in the final Sunday audience who rose to applaud the Ninth Symphony for 12 minutes may not have been quite the number that Schiller and Beethoven envisioned, but one had the feeling, even so, that the "millionen" were being conceptually embraced.

The final week of the Berkshire Festival saw 40,077 ticketholders cross the spacious greensward, out of the summer's eight-week total of 217,000. Dr. Munch was gratefully and abundantly seen off.

Guest conductors this summer were Pierre Monteux (four times), Eugene Ormandy (twice), and William Steinberg, who came Aug. 4 to repeat — even transcend—his triumph of the previous Boston season with the eighth symphonies of Beethoven and Bruckner. Dr. Munch himself conducted the balance of 17 concerts.

Chamber Music

Activity was strong in the field of chamber music, both at the Wednesday evening guest performances and in programs by student groups. Appearing among the former were the New York Pro Musica, the Marlboro Orchestra under Alexander Schneider (with Rudolf Serkin as piano soloist in the Fourth Concerto of Beethoven), the Beaux Arts and Nova Arte trios, and the Kroll Quartet.

A notable chamber music event was the final Friday afternoon Aspects of Music, in which Lukas Foss introduced an all-out contemporary sampling as "the kind I've always wanted Tanglewood to give." Music by such as Ralph Shapey, Morton Feldman, Karlheinz Stockhausen, and Earl Brown was performed both by guests and students, among them the Fromm Fellowship Players. Mr. Brown introduced and conducted his own "Available Forms No. 3."

The Coda from Irving Fine's Partita for Wind Quintet was played to open the concert, in honor of its composer, earlier participant in the Festival and former Tanglewood teacher, who had passed away the day before in Boston.

Noticeably successful with this audience (including Dr. Munch) was "For Franz Kline" by Morton Feldman, who was also present to comment on his music. Written for violin, horn, cello, bells, piano, and a wordless soprano (Linda Sanford), it offered each performer a score on which pitches and an overall slow-moving pianissimo were specified, but no actual time-values. The result, with its subdued, floating consistency, sounded restful and at peace with itself—a rare phenomenon in the afternoon's repertoire.

Such interesting and enjoyable ventures as this, however, and indeed Tanglewood's whole summer, seemed suddenly reduced behind the extraordinary stature of Dr. Munch's final two concerts as music director of the Boston Symphony. Their contents were familiar enough —Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel as Saturday night's composers, and Beethoven's Ninth, on Sunday, prefaced by Copland. But at their best they were dealt with not in terms of repetition, but of revelation.

Original Berlioz

Dr. Munch is well known, and sometimes apologized for, as a Berlioz specialist. His performance, met by a brilliantly responsive orchestra, of the "Fantastic" Symphony, bared a dramatic sting in this work which had seemed wrapped in purple romantic mannerism. The original Berlioz product stood up, with no more communicative consequence than before, but as a vital musical entity, a tonal tour de force whose colors shimmered, whose pace, at times, veered towards infinity.

Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" Suite No. 2, somewhat repetitive of each other, would still have been sonorously remarkable on any other program. But on Saturday night the Berlioz image was hard to erase.

Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," slenderly proportioned, served well to open Dr. Munch's final concert on Sunday afternoon. Originally composed as incidental music for an Irwin Shaw play, it was shaped into its present form by Mr. Copland "in a barn-studio two miles down the road from Tanglewood." He describes it as "evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity."

Against its wistful questions, associable with Walt Whitman's "Noiseless, patient spider," the towering protestations of Beethoven appeared as statements of incalculable and tender import. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, was joined by the University of Montreal Chorus, Fernand Graton, director, and the soloists were Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, and Donald Gramm. They and the orchestra followed Dr. Munch in a performance whose power and compassion beggar description.

The Scherzo, for instance, was in its trio subject a precipitous chase which tested the digital resources of even these string players, without losing the line's requisite flow. This, in turn, related it to the Adagio's wonderful deliberations.

Ode to Freedom

As we came to the choral Finale, it seemed apt to remember that Schiller's Ode, providing the text, was originally written not to joy, but to freedom. Europe's political uncertainties at the end of the 18th century made the earlier form dangerously controversial. Today, it seems virtually indispensable.

Charles Munch so utterly dedicated himself and his forces to articulating this symphonic cry of freedom, that it seemed empowered to speak to victims of enslavement anywhere. To have achieved this, when he was required only to take his leave with a fine festive flourish, places him, it may be, among the great men of his time.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

151

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

157

FIRST CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Boston Arts String Quartet

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin — EUGENE LEHNER, Viola
HARRY DICKSON, Violin — RICHARD KAPUSCINSKI, Cello
assisted by
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola

PROGRAM

MOZART Quintet in B flat major, K. 174

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto ma Allegretto
IV. Allegro

MOZART Quintet in C Major, K. 515

I. Allegro
II. Menuetto
III. Andante
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

MOZART Quintet in G minor, K. 516

I. Allegro
II. Menuetto: Allegretto
III. Adagio ma non troppo
IV. Adagio; Allegro

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 2 1962

Boston Quartet To Perform At Tanglewood Wednesday

TANGLEWOOD — The Boston Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give the first chamber music concert in the theater concert hall here Wednesday evening at 8, replacing the Budapest String Quartet. A member of the Budapest Quartet was taken ill over the weekend and thus the concert change was made this morning.

The Boston Arts Quartet was originally scheduled to give a chamber music performance in the theater on July 18.

Friday evening at 8 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Bach series in the Music Shed with Dr. Charles Munch conducting. Saturday morning at 10 there will be an open rehearsal of the BSO in the Shed and that evening at 8, and Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra in the concluding Bach concerts.

Friends Events

Friday afternoon at 3:15 a seminar in contemporary music will be held in the chamber music hall for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and another Friends event scheduled over the weekend will be a chamber music program in the chamber music hall Sunday morning at 10.

The following weekends in the Shed will be devoted to works [illegible].

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 78,016

JUL 5 1962

PINCH HITS

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Arts Quartet appeared at the Berkshire Music Festival Wednesday night in substitution for the announced Budapest String Quartet because of illness of one of the Budapest players. The Boston group presented an all-Mozart program.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64 387

JUL 6 1962

Chamber Music Opens Festival

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

An over-capacity audience of 1,400 turned out for the opening night chamber music concert in Tanglewood's small shed Wednesday evening.

And the first nighters were treated to a pleasant, though chilly, evening of an all-Mozart program and the occasional sound of a Fourth of July firecracker or two from the nearby Berkshire mountains.

The audience had reason for some disappointment. Due to the sudden illness of one of its members, the Budapest Quartet was forced to cancel its scheduled performance of the Berkshire Festival. A program of Mozart, Debussy and Beethoven had been scheduled.

Members of the Boston Arts String Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquals assisting, were called in as last minute replacements. And Mozart's Quintets in B flat major, C Major and G Minor formed the new program.

But if any audience member had been disappointed it didn't show when the quintet received "bravos" and a tremendous ovation at the end of the famous G Minor string quartet. The exquisite, bittersweet third movement, said to have brought tears to the eyes of Tchaikovsky, and the gay, rhythmic allegro proved the piece d' resistance of the evening.

Tonight, however, is still the "big" opening night at the 1962 Berkshire Festival. Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and an all-Bach program will be featured.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

157 P5

FIRST CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Boston Arts String Quartet

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin — EUGENE LEHNER, Viola
HARRY DICKSON, Violin — RICHARD KAPUSCINSKI, Cello

assisted by

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola

PROGRAM

MOZART Quintet in B flat major, K. 174

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto ma Allegretto
IV. Allegro

MOZART Quintet in C Major, K. 515

I. Allegro
II. Menuetto
III. Andante
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

MOZART Quintet in G minor, K. 516

I. Allegro
II. Menuetto: Allegretto
III. Adagio ma non troppo
IV. Adagio; Allegro

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 2 1962

Boston Quartet To Perform At Tanglewood Wednesday

TANGLEWOOD — The Boston Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give the first chamber music concert in the theater concert hall here Wednesday evening at 8, replacing the Budapest String Quartet. A member of the Budapest Quartet was taken ill over the weekend and thus the concert change was made this morning.

The Boston Arts Quartet was originally scheduled to give a chamber music performance in the theater on July 16.

Friday evening at 8 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Bach series in the Music Shed with Dr. Charles Munch conducting. Saturday morning at 10 there will be an open rehearsal of the BSO in the Shed and that evening at 8, and Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra in the concluding Bach concerts.

Friends Events

Friday afternoon at 3:15 a seminar in contemporary music will be held in the chamber music hall for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and another Friends event scheduled over the weekend will be a chamber music program in the chamber music hall Sunday morning at 10.

The following weekends in Shed will be devoted to works

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 78,016
JUL 5 1962

PINCH HITS

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Arts Quartet appeared at the Berkshire Music Festival Wednesday night in substitution for the announced Budapest String Quartet because of illness of one of the Budapest players. The Boston group presented an all-Mozart program.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
JUL 6 1962

Chamber Music Opens Festival

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

An over-capacity audience of 1,400 turned out for the opening night chamber music concert in Tanglewood's small shed Wednesday evening.

And the first nighters were treated to a pleasant, though chilly, evening of an all-Mozart program and the occasional sound of a Fourth of July firecracker or two from the nearby Berkshire mountains.

The audience had reason for some disappointment. Due to the sudden illness of one of its members, the Budapest Quartet was forced to cancel its scheduled performance of the Berkshire Festival. A program of Mozart, Debussy and Beethoven had been scheduled.

Members of the Boston Arts String Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquals assisting, were called in as last minute replacements. And Mozart's Quintets in B flat major, C Major and G Minor formed the new program.

But if any audience member had been disappointed it didn't show when the quintet received "bravos" and a tremendous ovation at the end of the famous G Minor string quartet. The exquisite, bittersweet third movement, said to have brought tears to the eyes of Tchaikovsky, and the gay, rhythmic allegro proved the piece d' resistance of the evening.

Tonight, however, is still the "big" opening night at the 1962 Berkshire Festival. Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and an all-Bach program will be featured.

158

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 5 1962

Music Review

Boston Arts Quartet at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST program of the 1962 Tanglewood season was played by the Boston Arts Quartet last night in the theater-concert hall. The quartet — Joseph Silverstein and Harry Dickson, violins, Eugen Lehner, viola, and Richard Kapuscinski, cello —was assisted by guest viola Joseph de Pasquale in three Mozart quintets. It had been announced that this first concert would be played by the Budapest String Quartet, but the illness of cellist Mischa Schneider necessitated a checkers play that brought the Boston Arts last night with the program they had been listed to give on the third of the eight Wednesday chamber concerts scheduled for the season.

* * *

THE SAME ensemble played three of the Mozart quintets last year. The three last night nearly complete the repertory Mozart provided in that category. There were the two big ones, C major (K515) and the great G minor (K516) and an early one, B flat (K174).

Incidentally, this is the centennial anniversary of the publication of the catalogue of Mozart's opera complied by the Austrian naturalist Ludwig Koechel, whose residence in Salsburg for a dozen years, starting in 1850, incited his interest and gave him the opportunity to work on and compile a chronological and thematic listing of that composer's total output. Mozart, without Koechel, would be difficult to identify so far as place and time of composition are concerned. Thus the "K" followed by a number distinguishes every Mozart work.

* * *

THE B FLAT quintet (K174), with which the evening started, is remarkable as the work of a 17-year-old boy, but it was far removed in content, as well as in years, from the other two of the evening. Indeed, Mozart neglected this combination for 14 full years before returning to it at the mature age, for him, of 30, when his command of tonal texture and of dramatic contrast was at its peak. Thus the early quintet has mainly, and only, the facility which was one of the early distinguishing marks of the young genius and the grace with which he endowed everything he touched.

The addition of a second viola to the basic string quartet fortifies the lovely quality and compounds the pleasure that register of strings affords. All five of the artists played with a tonal quality and the cachet of refinement which the first violinist and Boston orchestra concertmaster - designate Silverstein set as the standard of the evening. Indeed, an inflexible adherence to this polished attitude at times deprived certain movements of their individuality. For instance, by taking the uninhibited gaiety and ebullience from the finale of the C major quintet and inserting only a modicum of pathos in the first movement of the tragic, ensuing G minor, the ensemble brought both near a common denominator of expressiveness.

* * *

VERY FEW indications of Mozart's ideas of tempo come down to us, but he seemed to want to differentiate between the two adagios of the G minor. He marked the first one "ma non troppo." Our sense of tempo couud not distinguish between the paces of both these superb movements. There seemed to be an infatuation with tone per se, and we must agree that it was round and warm, though restrained, without exception.

Mozart was never in a more fecund mood than in these quintets. His imagination provided themes of ineffable beauty, modulations of unexpected but deeply gratifying juxtaposition, rhythmic variety and, above all, distinctive character. The opening statement of the C major quintet is a jewel of simple but effective contrast. The cello, obviously the suitor, ascends the arpeggioed ladder to the balcony where the demure damsel, the first violin, replies with a wonderfully apt, enchanted and graceful turn. This was fine and graphic playing.

* * *

BUT MOZART goes on to a minuet where a different set of ingredients are patently called for. A shake or two from a saliere of vulgarity would have added the spice which would have established the contrast Mozart may have had in mind. He himself both wrote and personally performed with a vast palette. The final allegro is music ready-made for a ballet after Jordaens or Teniers. "Drink and be merry" must have been erased from the legend for this movement. Mozart was by no means above a crude humour in many instances, and to apply a gloss of cultivation to such episodes is to abstract from them their proper hilarity, and, at a minimum, their cheerfulness.

An audience of 1,542 filled the hall and the fringe of the adjacent lawns, and gave the artists explosive salvos of enthusiastic appreciation.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, July 6, 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUL 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 5 1962

Series Begins Friday At Tanglewood

At the initial session of the Aspects of Music Series on Friday afternoon at 4 in the Chamber Music Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, the topic "What do the next 25 years promise for the musical profession in America?" will be dicussed by a panel of three men associated with the Berkshire Music Center and the Berkshire Festival.

Representing orchestra management will be Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Lukas Foss will speak for the composers and Seymour Lipkin, pianist and conductor, will represent his field of the music world. Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Berkshire Music Center, will be the moderator.

The Aspects of Music Series is presented each Friday afternoon during the Tanglewood season for the purpose of discussing current musical topics, the work of contemporary composers and the playing of their music.

* * *

SECOND CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The New York Pro Musica

NOAH GREENBERG, Director

SHEILA SCHONBRUN: Soprano
CAROLYN BACKUS: Soprano
JOHN FERRANTE: Countertenor
CHARLES BRESSLER: Tenor
GORDON MYERS: Baritone

BRAYTON LEWIS: Bass
LANOUE DAVENPORT: Recorder, krummhorn, alto sackbut
SHELLEY GRUSKIN: Flute, recorder, krummhorn, schryari
JUDITH DAVIDOFF: Bass viol
PAUL MAYNARD: Harpischord, portative organ

Instrumental consort rehearsed under the direction of LaNoue Davenport

PROGRAM

Early Baroque Music of Italy and Germany

	I
CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI (1567-1643)	Cantate Domino	Ensemble
	Laetaniae della Beata Vergine	Ensemble
	II
CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI	Entrata and Balletto	Vocal trio with instruments
	Baci, soavi e cari	Voices
	Ah, dolente partita	Voices
	Dolcissimo uscignolo	Voices with harpischord
	Hor ch'el ciel e la terra	Ensemble
	III
GIROLAMO FRESCOBALDI (1583-1643)	Canzon quinta	Instruments
	Two Correnti Toccata settima	Harpischord
RICCARDO ROGNIONO (fl. ca. 1600)	Anchor che col partire (ornamented version)	Recorder and harpischord
GIROLAMO FRESCOBALDI	Canzon terza	Instruments
	IV
CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI	Nisi Dominus (Psalm 127)	Ensemble
	INTERMISSION
	V
HEINRICH SCHÜTZ (1585-1672)	Das ist je gewisslich wahr	Ensemble
	Anima mea liquefacta est	Vocal duo with instruments
	Der Herr ist mein Hirt	Vocal duo with instruments
	VI
MICHAEL PRAETORIUS (1571-1621)	A suite of dances	Instruments
	Ballet des coqs
	Galliarde
	Ballet and Volte
	Spagnoletta
	Courante
	VII
JOHANN HERMANN SCHEIN (1586-1630)	Wende dich, Herr	Ensemble
	Da Jakob vollendet hatte
	Zion spricht: der Herr hat mich verlassen

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
:2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL 5 1962

THAM[illegible] MUSIC AT TANGLEWOOD . . . The New York Pro Musica group will present a concer[t] of earl[y] baroque vocal and instrumental chamber music in the Theater at Lenox, Mass., at 8 p.m. o[n] July [illegible] part of the 1962 Berkshire Festival.

Next Week

[illegible] second Wednesday night [illegible]ber Music Concert to be [illegible] at Tanglewood this sea[illegible] will be performed by the [illegible] York Pro Musica group at [illegible] on July 11 in the Theater. [illegible] will play early baroque [illegible] and instrumental chamber [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 12 1962

Music Review

New York Pro Musica

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SECOND of the Wednesday evening chamber music programs at Tanglewood brought back the exceptionally popular New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, director.

Confining itself completely to baroque music, Greenberg's ensemble consists of six vocalists, four male and two female voices, and four performers on an assortment of keyboards, stringed and wind instruments.

He inserted an instrumental group in each half of the program, but all the rest enlisted the participation of the voices in a widely contrasted and varied catalouge of music from the pre-Bach era. The vocal numbers from the first half were all chosen from the works of Claudio Monteverdi, the renowned maestro di cappella at St. Mark's in Venice. After intermission, music by German composers of that period, was played: Heinrich Schuetz, Michael Praetorius, the most celebrated of the composers of that name, and Johann Schein.

* * *

THE EVENING was characterized by such a joyous and fresh spirit in the performances that one might have been unaware of the deep and vast research which had undoubtedly preceded the preparation of such a gratifying program. The basic distinction of the Pro Musica is its personality and unity. Greenberg has not deviated from what is agreed and conceded are the characteristic features of music of three centuries ago. Yet he has not made it a museum display but rather something vital and vivacious, where appropriate, and reverentially moving where it is called for.

* * *

THE RECORDERS and other wind instruments were played by LaNoue Davenport and Shelley Gruskin, the bass viol, so-called but more recognizably a viola da gama, by Judith Davidoff, and the harpsichord by Paul Maynird. These instruments could be curiously quaint, but by employing them in normal usage a remarkable authenticity as well as tonal balance was achieved. They were so fittingly used and provided such a perfect balance that the thought of substituting a piano or a stringed instrument played with a bow gripped to produce a more incisive tone, or present day winds would not only have been anachronistic but thoroughly out of place, and would have disturbed the relationship which the evening conveyed so truly.

Sheila Schonbrunn and Carolyn Backus were the sopranos, John Ferrante, counter-tenor, Charles Bressler, tenor, Gordon Myers, baritone and Brayton Lewis, bass. The close-knit homogeneity of the vocal ensemble was one of the features of the evening. All had solo opportunities, and there were duos and larger ensembles but all were discharged with such fresh buoyancy and radiant tone that the evening passed swiftly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 12 1962

Concert Review

Pro Musica Group Presents Program At Tanglewood

NEW YORK PRO MUSICA at the Theater-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, Noah Greenberg, director. Early Baroque Music of Italy and Germany by Claudio Monteverdi (1567-1643), Girolamo Frescobaldi (1583-1643), Riccardo Rogniono (1600), Heinrich Schutz (1585-1672), Michael Praetorius (1571-1621), and Johann Hermann Schein (1586-1630).

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Glancing forward of today's music, there is an occasional impression that something weird may occur to our children's ears. However, following last night's exquisite concert of the New York Pro Musica, there possibly grew an impression that prior to, say, 1900 and after 1800 the ear had softened and the mind gone limp in a mire of mental marshmallows. No doubt we are climbing out of that state with the leadership of such men as Stravinsky, Hindemith, Foss and their ilk, but back when psychiatrists were philosophers and trombones sackbuts, composers lived 'til they were 80, and it was a wonderful, wonderful day for music.

Greenberg Directs

Noah Greenberg, a recent winner of a Ford grant, who is also a summer resident of Williamstown, directed a concert of this amazing early baroque music that was, though limited by range, tone and color of the early instruments, and restrained by the severe counterpoint of that day, devoid of any sense of academic exercise or musical stagnancy. Soloists of the highest calibre distinguished the music far beyond the idea of accuracy with sensitive balance and natural dignity.

The handsome contributions were made by Shelia Schonbrun, whose half voice is somewhat sweeter than her full voice; and Carolyn Backus, a gentle, but on proper occasion, very full and vibrant voice. Charles Bressler, and excellent tenor with marvelous and sensitive control, plus Gordon Myers, baritone; Brayton Lewis, bass and a countertenor (which is akin to an alto in pitch) of great strength and reserve named Charles Bressler, formed the men's voices.

The band of instrumentalists, which is rehearsed under the direction of LaNoue Davenport, was generally not much less talented than the voices. Granted one found a few selections for instruments alone that mirrored a rather flat reflection for the music they produced, however, the variance of tone color engendered by such instruments as the krummhorn, the alto sackbut, recorder and schryari is enough to shake the inventor of the electronic synthesizer.

One Small Complaint

One small complaint might be found in the written program which paid no attention to the public's translation problems. Though copious program notes of text in English and foreign tongue are often a cumbersome bore, title translations would, I feel, do little to damage the aspect of listening.

The next Theater-Concert Hall program at Tanglewood is on Wednesday, July 18, and will be the Marlboro Orchestra directed by Alexander Schneider with Rudolf Serkin, pianist.

SECOND CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The New York Pro Musica

NOAH GREENBERG, Director

SHEILA SCHONBRUN: Soprano
CAROLYN BACKUS: Soprano
JOHN FERRANTE: Countertenor
CHARLES BRESSLER: Tenor
GORDON MYERS: Baritone
BRAYTON LEWIS: Bass
LANOUE DAVENPORT: Recorder, krummhorn, alto sackbut
SHELLEY GRUSKIN: Flute, recorder, krummhorn, schryari
JUDITH DAVIDOFF: Bass viol
PAUL MAYNARD: Harpischord, portative organ

Instrumental consort rehearsed under the direction of LaNoue Davenport

PROGRAM

Early Baroque Music of Italy and Germany

I

CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI (1567-1643)	Cantate Domino	Ensemble
	Laetaniae della Beata Vergine	Ensemble

II

CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI	Entrata and Balletto	Vocal trio with instruments
	Baci, soavi e cari	Voices
	Ah, dolente partita	Voices
	Dolcissimo uscignolo	Voices with harpischord
	Hor ch'el ciel e la terra	Ensemble

III

GIROLAMO FRESCOBALDI (1583-1643)	Canzon quinta	Instruments
	Two Correnti Toccata settima	Harpischord
RICCARDO ROGNIONO (fl. ca. 1600)	Anchor che col partire (ornamented version)	Recorder and harpischord
GIROLAMO FRESCOBALDI	Canzon terza	Instruments

IV

CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI	Nisi Dominus (Psalm 127)	Ensemble

INTERMISSION

V

HEINRICH SCHÜTZ (1585-1672)	Das ist je gewisslich wahr	Ensemble
	Anima mea liquefacta est	Vocal duo with instruments
	Der Herr ist mein Hirt	Vocal duo with instruments

VI

MICHAEL PRAETORIUS (1571-1621)	A suite of dances	Instruments
	Ballet des coqs
	Galliarde
	Ballet and Volte
	Spagnoletta
	Courante

VII

JOHANN HERMANN SCHEIN (1586-1630)	Wende dich, Herr	Ensemble
	Da Jakob vollendet hatte
	Zion spricht: der Herr hat mich verlassen

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL 5 1962

CHAMBER MUSIC AT TANGLEWOOD . . . The New York Pro Musica group will present a concert of early baroque vocal and instrumental chamber music in the Theater at Lenox, Mass., at 8 p.m. on July 11, as part of the 1962 Berkshire Festival.

Next Week

The second Wednesday night Chamber Music Concert to be given at Tanglewood this season will be performed by the New York Pro Musica group at 8 p.m. on July 11 in the Theater. They will play early baroque vocal and instrumental chamber music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 12 1962

159 " P 6

Music Review

New York Pro Musica

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SECOND of the Wednesday evening chamber music programs at Tanglewood brought back the exceptionally popular New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, director.

Confining itself completely to baroque music, Greenberg's ensemble consists of six vocalists, four male and two female voices, and four performers on an assortment of keyboards, stringed and wind instruments.

He inserted an instrumental group in each half of the program, but all the rest enlisted the participation of the voices in a widely contrasted and varied catalouge of music from the pre-Bach era. The vocal numbers from the first half were all chosen from the works of Claudio Monteverdi, the renowned maestro di cappella at St. Mark's in Venice. After intermission, music by German composers of that period, was played: Heinrich Schuetz, Michael Praetorius, the most celebrated of the composers of that name, and Johann Schein.

* * *

THE EVENING was characterized by such a joyous and fresh spirit in the performances that one might have been unaware of the deep and vast research which had undoubtedly preceded the preparation of such a gratifying program. The basic distinction of the Pro Musica is its personality and unity. Greenberg has not deviated from what is agreed and conceded are the characteristic features of music of three centuries ago. Yet he has not made it a museum display but rather something vital and vivacious, where appropriate, and reverentially moving where it is called for.

* * *

THE RECORDERS and other wind instruments were played by LaNoue Davenport and Shelley Gruskin, the bass viol, so-called but more recognizably a viola da gama, by Judith Davidoff, and the harpsichord by Paul Maynard. These instruments could be curiously quaint, but by employing them in normal usage a remarkable authenticity as well as tonal balance was achieved. They were so fittingly used and provided such a perfect balance that the thought of substituting a piano or a stringed instrument played with a bow gripped to produce a more incisive tone, or present day winds would not only have been anachronistic but thoroughly out of place, and would have disturbed the relationship which the evening conveyed so truly.

Sheila Schonbrunn and Carolyn Backus were the sopranos, John Ferrante, counter-tenor, Charles Bressler, tenor, Gordon Myers, baritone and Brayton Lewis, bass. The close-knit homogeneity of the vocal ensemble was one of the features of the evening. All had solo opportunities, and there were duos and larger ensembles but all were discharged with such fresh buoyancy and radiant tone that the evening passed swiftly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 12 1962

Concert Review

Pro Musica Group Presents Program At Tanglewood

NEW YORK PRO MUSICA at the Theater-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, Noah Greenberg, director. Early Baroque Music of Italy and Germany by Claudio Monteverdi (1567-1643), Girolamo Frescobaldi (1583-1643), Riccardo Rogniono (1600), Heinrich Schutz (1585-1672), Michael Praetorius (1571-1621), and Johann Hermann Schein (1586-1630).

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Glancing forward of today's music, there is an occasional impression that something weird may occur to our children's ears. However, following last night's exquisite concert of the New York Pro Musica, there possibly grew an impression that prior to, say, 1900 and after 1800 the ear had softened and the mind gone limp in a mire of mental marshmallows. No doubt we are climbing out of that state with the leadership of such men as Stravinsky, Hindemith, Foss and their ilk, but back when psychiatrists were philosophers and trombones sackbuts, composers lived 'til they were 80, and it was a wonderful, wonderful day for music.

Greenberg Directs

Noah Greenberg, a recent winner of a Ford grant, who is also a summer resident of Williamstown, directed a concert of this amazing early baroque music that was, though limited by range, tone and color of the early instruments, and restrained by the severe counterpoint of that day, devoid of any sense of academic exercise or musical stagnancy. Soloists of the highest calibre distinguished the music far beyond the idea of accuracy with sensitive balance and natural dignity.

The handsome contributions were made by Shelia Schonbrun, whose half voice is somewhat sweeter than her full voice; and Carolyn Backus, a gentle, but on proper occasion, very full and vibrant voice. Charles Bressler, and excellent tenor with marvelous and sensitive control, plus Gordon Myers, baritone; Brayton Lewis, bass and a counter-tenor (which is akin to an alto in pitch) of great strength and reserve named Charles Bressler, formed the men's voices.

The band of instrumentalists, which is rehearsed under the direction of LaNoue Davenport, was generally not much less talented than the voices. Granted one found a few selections for instruments alone that mirrored a rather flat reflection for the music they produced, however, the variance of tone color engendered by such instruments as the krummborn, the alto sackbut, recorder and schryari is enough to shake the inventor of the electronic synthesizer.

One Small Complaint

One small complaint might be found in the written program which paid no attention to the public's translation problems. Though copious program notes of text in English and foreign tongue are often a cumbersome bore, title translations would, I feel, do little to damage the aspect of listening.

The next Theater-Concert Hall program at Tanglewood is on Wednesday, July 18, and will be the Marlboro Orchestra directed by Alexander Schneider with Rudolf Serkin, pianist.

160

THIRD CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

Music from Marlboro

Marlboro Orchestra

Directed by ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER

PROGRAM

VIVALDI Concerto in C major, "Per la solennita di S. Lorenzo"
Largo — Allegro molto — Largo e cantabile — Allegro
MICHAEL TREE and SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Violins
DAVID SOYER, 'Cello

VIVALDI Concerto in D minor, for Two Violins, and Strings, with Figured Bass
Allegro non molto — Adagio — Allegro molto
MICHAEL TREE and SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Violins

HAYDN Symphony in F minor, No. 49, "La Passione"
Adagio
Allegro di molto
Menuetto
Finale: Presto

INTERMISSION

VIVALDI Sinfonia in B minor, for Strings ("Al Santo Sepulchro")
Adagio molto — Allegro ma poco

VIVALDI Concerto in E minor, for Strings and Figured Bass
Allegro moderato — Andante — Allegro

VIVALDI Concerto in E major, for Violin and Strings ("Il Riposo")
Allegro molto moderato — Adagio — Allegro
ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER, Violin

MOZART Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414
Allegro
Andante
Allegretto
RUDOLF SERKIN, Piano

Steinway Piano — Columbia Records

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 12 1962

Marlboro Festival Orchestra At Tanglewood Wednesday

TANGLEWOOD — Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has extended an invitation to Rudolf Serkin, music director of the Marlboro Festival, for a performance by the Marlboro Festival Orchestra at the Wednesday night chamber music concert, July 18.

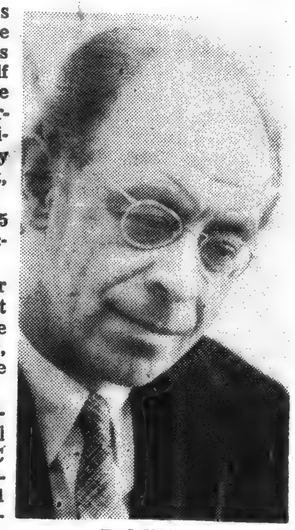
The Marlboro Orchestra of 35 players will be under the direction of Alexander Schneider.

The sudden illness of a member of the Budapest String Quartet prompted the change in the Wednesday chamber music series, enabling Mr. Munch to invite the Marlboro group to Tanglewood.

Beginning at 8 in the Tanglewood Theater, the concert will open with the Concerto in C major for Two Violins and Violoncello by Vivaldi, with Michael Tree, Samuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist, as the soloists. This is to be followed by Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and Figured Bass, with Mr. Ashkenasi and Mr. Tree as soloists. The concluding work prior to the intermission will be Symphony No. 49, "La Passione," by Haydn.

Mozart's Piano Concerto

The second half of Wednesday's program will consist of three more works of Vivaldi: the Sinfonia in B minor for Strings, the Concerto in E minor for Strings and Figured Bass, the Concerto in E major for Violin and Strings with Alexander Schneider as soloist. Rudolf Serkin will be soloist in the final portion of the concert, Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414.



Rudolf Serkin
Piano soloist

Tickets for this concert are available at the Berkshire Festival box office at Tanglewood.

Music of Mozart will feature the second weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed, opening tomorrow night at 8. Dr. Munch has invited Claude Frank to be soloist with the BSO in a performance of the Piano Concerto, K. 503. Also to be heard tomorrow will be the Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361, and Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

Following an open rehearsal Saturday at 10 a.m., the evening concert at 8 will consist of the Mozart Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, in E-flat, K. 364, with Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloist; Ein Musikalischer Spass ('A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 522; Symphony No. 39, K. 543.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season Sunday at 2:30 p.m. With Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

Whitestone

MUSIC FROM MARLBORO will be on the chamber music program in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood Wednesday night at 8. Rudolf Serkin, right, will perform a piano solo with the Marlboro Festival Orchestra, directed by Alexander Schneider, left.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JUL 16 1962

Marlboro Artists Play Wednesday At Tanglewood

Rudolf Serkin, music director of the Marlboro, Vt., Festival, and the Marlboro Festival Orchestra will perform at the chamber music concert Wednesday at Tanglewood.

The Marlboro Orchestra of 35 players will be under the direction of Alexander Schneider. Beginning at 8 p.m. in the Tanglewood Theater, the concert will include the Concerto in C major for Two Violins and Cello by Vivaldi with Michael Tree, Samuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist, soloists; Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins; Symphony No. 49, "La Passione" by Haydn; and three more works of Vivaldi: the Sinfonia in B minor, the Concerto in E minor, and the Concerto in E major, with Alexander Schneider as soloist. Serkin will be soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major (K. 414.).

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
JUL 15 1962

NEIGHBORS: Marlboro, Vt., is eighty miles north of Lenox, Mass. This proximity gave officials of the Berkshire Festival a suggestion for a way out of a pinch. The difficulty arose just before the Tanglewood season opened, when the Budapest String Quartet had to cancel its July 4 program because one of its members was ill. The Boston Arts Quartet jumped in to fill the breach. But this left an opening on July 18, when the Boston Arts was to have played the program it gave on July 4. The saving idea was to get the Marlboro Festival to help its larger neighbor out. Charles Munch put the matter to Rudolf Serkin. The pianist said Marlboro would gladly lend not just a string quartet, but a whole chamber orchestra. What is more, Mr. Serkin would come along as a soloist. Accordingly, next Wednesday's concert will be "Music from Marlboro." Mr. Serkin will play a Mozart concerto, and there will be Vivaldi concertos featuring some of the Marlboro instrumentalists.

160

THIRD CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

Music from Marlboro

Marlboro Orchestra

Directed by ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER

PROGRAM

VIVALDI Concerto in C major, "Per la solennita di S. Lorenzo"
Largo — Allegro molto — Largo e cantabile — Allegro
MICHAEL TREE and SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Violins
DAVID SOYER, 'Cello

VIVALDI Concerto in D minor, for Two Violins, and Strings, with Figured Bass
Allegro non molto — Adagio — Allegro molto
MICHAEL TREE and SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Violins

HAYDN Symphony in F minor, No. 49, "La Passione"
Adagio
Allegro di molto
Menuetto
Finale: Presto

INTERMISSION

VIVALDI Sinfonia in B minor, for Strings ("Al Santo Sepulchro")
Adagio molto — Allegro ma poco

VIVALDI Concerto in E minor, for Strings and Figured Bass
Allegro moderato — Andante — Allegro

VIVALDI Concerto in E major, for Violin and Strings ("Il Riposo")
Allegro molto moderato — Adagio — Allegro
ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER, Violin

MOZART Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414
Allegro
Andante
Allegretto
RUDOLF SERKIN, Piano

Steinway Piano — Columbia Records

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 12 1962

Marlboro Festival Orchestra At Tanglewood Wednesday

TANGLEWOOD — Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has extended an invitation to Rudolf Serkin, music director of the Marlboro Festival, for a performance by the Marlboro Festival Orchestra at the Wednesday night chamber music concert, July 18.

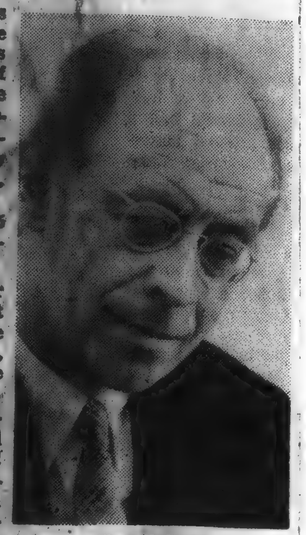
The Marlboro Orchestra of 35 players will be under the direction of Alexander Schneider.

The sudden illness of a member of the Budapest String Quartet prompted the change in the Wednesday chamber music series, enabling Mr. Munch to invite the Marlboro group to Tanglewood.

Beginning at 8 in the Tanglewood Theater, the concert will open with the Concerto in C major for Two Violins and Violoncello by Vivaldi, with Michael Tree, Samuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist, as the soloists. This is to be followed by Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and Figured Bass, with Mr. Ashkenasi and Mr. Tree as soloists. The concluding work prior to the intermission will be Symphony No. 49, "La Passione," by Haydn.

Mozart's Piano Concerto

The second half of Wednesday's program will consist of three more works of Vivaldi: the Sinfonia in B minor for Strings, the Concerto in E minor for Strings and Figured Bass, the Concerto in E major for Violin and Strings with Alexander Schneider as soloist. Rudolf Serkin will be soloist in the final portion of the concert, Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414.



Rudolf Serkin
Piano soloist

Tickets for this concert are available at the Berkshire Festival box office at Tanglewood.

Music of Mozart will feature the second weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed, opening tomorrow night at 8. Dr. Munch has invited Claude Frank to be soloist with the BSO in a performance of the Piano Concerto, K. 503. Also to be heard tomorrow will be the Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361, and Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

Following an open rehearsal Saturday at 10 a.m., the evening concert at 8 will consist of the Mozart Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, in E-flat, K. 364, with Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloist; Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 522; Symphony No. 39, K. 543.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season Sunday at 2:30 p.m. With Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

Whitestone

MUSIC FROM MARLBORO will be on the chamber music program in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood Wednesday night at 8. Rudolf Serkin, right, will perform a piano solo with the Marlboro Festival Orchestra, directed by Alexander Schneider, left.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JUL 16 1962

Marlboro Artists Play Wednesday At Tanglewood

Rudolf Serkin, music director of the Marlboro, Vt., Festival, and the Marlboro Festival Orchestra will perform at the chamber music concert Wednesday at Tanglewood.

The Marlboro Orchestra of 35 players will be under the direction of Alexander Schneider. Beginning at 8 p.m. in the Tanglewood Theater, the concert will include the Concerto in C major for Two Violins and Cello by Vivaldi with Michael Tree, Samuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist, soloists; Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins; Symphony No. 49, "La Passione" by Haydn; and three more works of Vivaldi: the Sinfonia in B minor, the Concerto in E minor, and the Concerto in E major, with Alexander Schneider as soloist. Serkin will be soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major (K. 414.).

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
JUL 15 1962

NEIGHBORS: Marlboro, Vt., is eighty miles north of Lenox, Mass. This proximity gave officials of the Berkshire Festival a suggestion for a way out of a pinch. The difficulty arose just before the Tanglewood season opened, when the Budapest String Quartet had to cancel its July 4 program because one of its members was ill. The Boston Arts Quartet jumped in to fill the breach. But this left an opening on July 18, when the Boston Arts was to have played the program it gave on July 4. The saving idea was to get the Marlboro Festival to help its larger neighbor out. Charles Munch put the matter to Rudolf Serkin. The pianist said Marlboro would gladly lend not just a string quartet, but a whole chamber orchestra. What is more, Mr. Serkin would come along as a soloist. Accordingly, next Wednesday's concert will be "Music from Marlboro." Mr. Serkin will play a Mozart concerto, and there will be Vivaldi concertos featuring some of the Marlboro instrumentalists.

New York Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUL 14 1962

Serkin Soloist In Berkshire Music Festival

LENOX, Mass.

The Marlboro Festival Orchestra will play at Tanglewood next Wednesday night, July 18, in the third concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's chamber music series with Alexander Schneider conducting and Rudolf Serkin as soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major, (K. 414). The program also includes works by Vivaldi and Haydn. This orchestra was invited to come from Marlboro, Vt., to Tanglewood after the Budapest Quartet had to withdraw from the chamber music series owing to the illness of one of its members.

In the Boston Pops Orchestra's annual Tanglewood concert under Arthur Fiedler's direction for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday night, Aug. 2, Earl Wild will be the soloist in Gershwin's Piano Concerto. The program will also offer works by Sousa, Massenet, Josef Strauss, Respighi and Leonard Bernstein.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
July 18, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

JUL 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636

JUL 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 535,565

JUL 17 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 18 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

JUL 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363

JUL 14 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY UNION STAR
July 16, 1962

Lenox Calls On Orchestra For Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 16—The Marlboro Festival Orchestra of 35 players, conducted by Alexander Schneider, will give the Berkshire Chamber Music Festival program Wednesday night in place of the Budapest String Quartet. The change was made because of the illness of a member of the quartet.

Beginning at 8:30, the concert will open with Vivaldi's "Concerto in C Major for Two Violins and Cello," the same composer's "Concerto in D Minor for Two Violins and Figured Bass" and Haydn's "Symphony No. 49." Three more Vivaldi works and a Mozart number will conclude the program. They are "Sinfonia in B Minor for Strings," "Concerto in E Major for Violin and Strings" and "Concerto in E Minor for Strings and Figured Bass" by Vivaldi and "Piano Concerto in A Major, K. 414" by Mozart.

Tanglewood Offers Marlboro Festival Group Tomorrow

In a unique joining of musical hands, Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has extended an invitation to Rudolf Serkin, music director of the Marlboro Festival, for a performance by the Marlboro Festival Orchestra at the Wednesday chamber music concert at Tanglewood tomorrow night. The Marlboro Orchestra of 35 players will be under the musical direction of Alexander Schneider. The sudden illness of a member of the Budapest String Quartet prompted the realigning of the Wednesday chamber music series, enabling Charles Munch to invite the Marlboro Festival Orchestra to Tanglewood.

Beginning at 8 p.m. in the Tanglewood Theater, the concert will open with the Concerto in C Major for Two Violins and Violoncell by Vivaldi with Michael Tree, Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist, as the soloists. This is to be followed by Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for two Violins and Figured Bass with Mr. Ashkenasi and Mr. Tree as soloists. The concluding work prior to the intermission will be the Symphony No. 49, "La Passione" by Haydn.

The second half of Wednesday's program will consist of three more works of Vivaldi: The Sinfonia in B minor for Strings; the Concerto in E minor for Strings and Figured Bass; the Concerto in E major for Violin and Strings with Alexander Schneider as soloist. Rudolf Serkin will be soloist in the final portion of the concert, Mozart's Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414.

Tickets for this concert are available at the Berkshire Festival Box Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

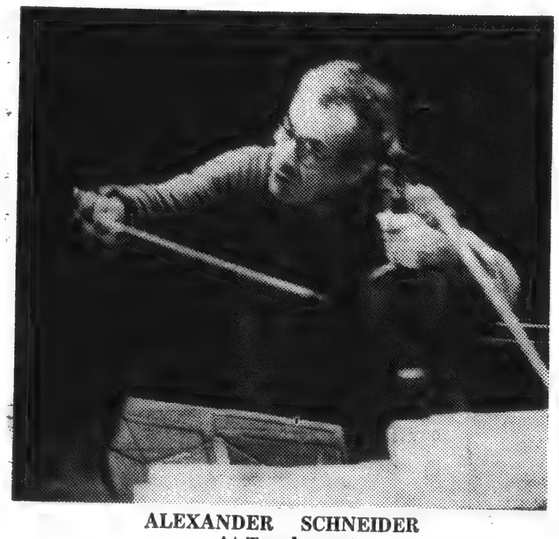
Albany Knickerbocker News
July 18, 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387

JUL 18 1962

The Aisle Seat

Berkshire Offers Marlboro Music



ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER
At Tanglewood

By TED STRONGIN

TIED-in-the-wool Tanglewoodians may be due for a pleasant surprise at tonight's concert on the Berkshire Music Festival Chamber Music Series.

Mischa Schneider, cellist for the Budapest String Quartet, was ill for the opening Tanglewood concert of the season, July 4. And so the Budapest had to withdraw.

Diplomatic Relations

A resulting complex series of shifts and shuffles has landed the Marlboro Music Festival Chamber Orchestra tonight in Tanglewood. This is the first formal act of diplomatic relations between the two festivals. But many individual musicians have shuttled back and forth between Tanglewood and Marlboro in pursuit of their own causes. The last such was Friday night when Claude Frank, summering at Marlboro, played a Mozart piano concerto with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

In any case, having heard music at both festivals this summer, I have a feeling that the regular Tanglewood audience tonight is going to be swept off its feet by what the dedicated Marlborians' offer.

162

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MANHATTAN EAST
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

JUL 26 1962

Music

The Welcome Guests

By Leila Siegel

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The management of the Berkshire Festival had a happy idea to invite the Marlboro Orchestra from nearby Vermont to play at one of its Wednesday chamber music evenings. The visitors came last week on July 18.

The program was devoted to five works by Vivaldi, a Haydn Symphony and the A major piano concerto, K. 414 by Mozart, with Rudolph Serkin, artistic director of the Marlboro School and Festival, as soloist.

Unlike the Berkshire Festival's regular orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra — the Marlboro Orchestra, conducted by Alexander Schneider, is composed of young musicians who only play together during the summer. They do not have the smoothness of the mighty Boston, but they make up for it with their obvious passion and youthful enthusiasm for the music they play. They started to play diffidently but, encouraged by the audience's extremely friendly reception, they warmed up as the evening progressed. Mr. Schneider, who plays his violin with the orchestra as was done in the 18th century, is justified in his evident pride in the group.

Michael Tree and Shmuel Ashkenasi, solo violins, and David Soyer, 'cello, played Vivaldi at the beginning of the program with authentic style and infectious charm. Special mention should be made of the nameless continuo player who blended his piano with the orchestra in all the Vivaldi concerti in true unobstrusive support.

The Symphony in F minor, No. 49, which was later surnamed La Passione, is a very moving, intense work which Haydn wrote in 1768. Its mood, however, presages the Romantic Era rather than the sunnier, assured and optimistic mood of much of Haydn's music.

In the second half of the concert, Vivaldi's Sinfonia in B minor for Strings (Al Santo Sepulchro) was played with the intimacy of a quartet rather than an orchestra. The pianissimo sustained throughout the Concerto in E minor, for Strings and Figured Bass, was impeccable and very moving. The last of the Vivaldi concerti was one for violin and strings in E major (Il Riposo). Mr. Schneider played it, as was to be expected, with great distinction and beauty of tone.

The evening ended with Mr. Serkin playing Mozart. One of the greatest pianists of our, and any, time playing a masterpiece by one of the greatest composers of all time is music at its superlative best.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 22 1962

Second Thoughts On Music

Marlboro Orchestra Has Young, Talented Players

Mozart Concerto Rendered Delightfully by Clever, Refreshing Vermont Group

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Our first concert in the current chamber music series here at the Berkshire Festival was our first hearing of the Marlboro Orchestra from the Marlboro School in Vermont. The school is conducted by the eminent pianist Rudolf Serkin and to make our joy complete, Mr. Serkin appeared with the orchestra playing a Mozart concerto. There is something very refreshing in listening to a group of young people who speak the same musical language. These young people, although students, were extremely clever. In fact, I do not remember a student group that played with greater technical ease and who were apparently so embued with the culture of their conductor Alexander Schneider, one of the truly great ensemble musicians of this generation.

Artfully Designed

The program was artfully designed to show these young musicians at their best. Five works by Vivaldi allowed tremendous play of color as well as an opportunity for discreet humor. These works were admirably matched by a Sonata in F minor by Haydn. The final number on the program was the Piano Concerto in A major, K. 414, by Mr. Mozart.

Therefore, on this program there was really something for everybody. What impressed us most in the ensemble playing was the clever use of dynamics and a consistently beautiful tone. Mr. Schneider conducted and joined in the ensemble. He seemed as proud of the results obtained as the listening audience. There was much handshaking after each work.

As usual this chamber music concert drew a most discriminating audience. We were told that the 1655 was the largest chamber music audience in two years.

In 12th Season

The Marlboro Music School and Festival, whose artistic director is Rudolf Serkin, is now now holding its 12th session. Through seven weeks there are 22informal concerts by fellow participants'' and week-end Festival concerts. There are special programs of Bach Cantatas and others with emphasis upon the works of Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn and Dvorak. Pablo Casals has been conducting master classes through the first two weeks.

Alexander Schneider is one of an impressive list of practicing artists. The school began in 1950 when the facilities of Marlboro College were offered to the late Adolf Busch, his brother Hermann, Rudolf Serkin, Marcel Moyse, and his son and daughter-in-law Louis and Blanche Moyse to start a summer music program.

The next chamber music concert will be given by the Boston Arts Quartet on Wednesday. The program will consist of works by Schoenberg, Webern and Berger, which may be an answer to those members of the Festival audience who are continually clamoring for contemporary works. We hope they enjoy them.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 19 1962

JOY TRIUMPHS IN CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Marlboro Orchestra Program Dispels Gloom Of Lenox Skies

By WILLARD CLARK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—No sun, no moon, no stars pierced the murky gray of this Wednesday, July 18. However, in the theater at Tanglewood there was plenty of joy and sunshine for the young musicians of the Marlboro Orchestra under the diection of Alexander Schneider were playing the third concert in the current chamber music series of the Berkshire Festival.

Long Anticipated

We had looked forward a long time to hearing these talented students but the result far exceeded our fondest expectations. Here is a group of young people speaking the same musical language with an eloquence which we have heard few ensembles attain.

As everyone knows, Alexander Schneider is one of the great ensemble players of this generation and a musician to whom other musicians look up. He conducted from his chair and joined the ensemble occasionally. We have not seen this conductor-performer combination used for many years but that it can be accomplished successfully was clearly shown.

The program was devoted to three composers, Vivaldi, Haydn and Mozart. The final number on the program was the Mozart piano concerto in F major, K.414, which brought to the stage as soloist Rudolf Serkin. One found in the music of Vivaldi a host of moods, exquisite harmonies and melodies, and innumerable cute devices to attract and hold the attention of the listeners.

Among the Cleve soloists were Michael Tree, Samuel Ashkenasi, violinists, and David Soyer, cellist. Mr. Schneider was the eloquent soloist in the concerto in A major for violin and strings.

What impressed us most in these Vivaldi performances and indeed in all the performances was the technical exactness of the playing, the beauty and variety of tone, and the disciplined dynamic range. This perhaps is the reason so many students are going to Marlboro to study ensemble playing. The results we heard were almost fantastic. The audience appeared perfectly happy and occasionally burst into applause before the music ended.

Familiar Magic

Mr. Serkin exerted his familiar magic playing Mozart with the exquisite tone colorations he can evoke and blending his playing quite perfectly into the orchestral whole. Modest and unassuming as ever, he still dominated the performance and seemed to give an added inspiration to the orchestra which played with him even better than it had played the Vivaldi works.

We almost forgot to mention Papa Haydn, not because his music was every whit as beautiful and original as Vivaldi, but because it was so much like it. There was the rough humor to which we have become accustomed as well as the elephantine grace of the more romantic episodes.

All in all this was a concert to cherish. Not only because of its performance but because these young people are continuing a tradition which some have feared would vanish. String players are difficult to get and good ones well nigh impossible.

Forever Grateful

While we may well be disappointed at missing the famed Budapest Quartet, scheduled for this series, the opportunity to hear the Marlboro Orchestra was one which we will be forever grateful to the powers that be who arranged it.

The next program in the Chamber Music series will be by the Boston Arts Quartet playing works by Webern, Berger and Schoenberg. Let no one say that the avant garde music is absent from the Tanglewood programs. This should be a program to satisfy the most exacting.

Incidentally, the attendance Wednesday – was the largest chamber music audience in two years, with a total of 1655. I have some doubts that the program next week will draw that many.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 19 1962

Tanglewood

Marlboro Group Gives Concert, Schneider Directs

Third Wednesday Chamber Music Concert—Marlboro Orchestra directed by Alexander Schneider with Rudolf Serkin, pianist. Theater-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox.

Concerto in C major Vivaldi
Soloists: Michael Tree and Shmuel Ashkenasi, violins, David Soyer, cello Concerto in D minor Vivaldi
Soloists: Michael Tree and Shmuel Ashkenasi, violins
Symphony No. 49 Haydn
Sinfonia in B minor for Strings Vivaldi
Concerto in E minor Vivaldi
Concerto in E major Vivaldi
Soloist:
Alexander Schneider, violin
Piano Concerto in A major K. 414 Mozart
Soloist:
Rudolf Serkin, piano

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Marlboro Music School and Festival is composed of a group of professional musicians of the highest caliber who study and practice chamber music in Marlboro, Vermont. Last night, to fill an unavoidable cancellation at Tanglewood's regular Chamber Music Series, the Marlboro Orchestra provided a most magnificient substitute. The program, mainly Vivaldi, was directed entirely by Alexander Schneider who played as he conducted seated in a chair facing the orchestra.

Sensitive Playing

The director soloed, as well, in the most exquisite and sensitive playing this reviewer has heard in a very long time. It was not the perfect playing of a virtuoso that took one's attention, but rather the fidelity of intent to express warmly the excellence of the music of Vivaldi to the auditor's intimate enjoyment. It was not only here that such results were successful, it was throughout the entire concert that one felt a rare and generous participation in the music. A relaxed and informal atmosphere created by the musicians closed only when they performed, and even then a smile (as rare during concerts as rain) would occur occasionally at the musical happenings on stage. The frank, personal modesty of the performers and the respect for their director verged on the hilarious when Mr. Schneider resorted to constant tugging (frequently unavailing) to induce members to share in applause.

Exciting Music

But again, the superb performances, such as the short Mozart Piano Concerto played so ably by Rudolf Serkin (but why so short a cadenza?) was music to judge Mozart by. The bright and bubbling sound supported as it is by the genius of his subtle musical ideas was here clearly the secret of the natural frolic that the A major concerto creates throughout. The vigorous performance that the Concerto in D for two violins provided was perhaps, despite a small lack of string intonation, as exciting as most music probably ever became whether early 1700 or, frankly in many ways, 1962.

The Haydn "La Passione" Symphony in F minor is not, to my mind, characteristic of the composer; it appears personal rather than the fresh musical beauty of the majority of his other works. The music, however, after the lugubrious adagio, did get into flight in the allegro and presto — though no unveering orbit seemed to be achieved as it was in most of the other numbers. The orchestra's detailed care of line and richness of individual tone that prescribes musical taste for such delicate music made this a concert to be long remembered.

On next Wednesday, July 25th the Boston Arts Quartet will again perform in the Theater-Concert Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 19 1962

163

Music Review

Marlboro Orchestra at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE CHAMBER orchestra from Marlboro (Vt.) summer school supplied the third program in the Wednesday evening series in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood. An ensemble of 30 musicians traveled the 60-odd miles to present a program selected from works they had prepared and presented on their own stage since the beginning of the current season.

This was an extraordinary concert. The guiding spirit of the school and participant in the final work of the evening was Rudolph Serkin, a pianist of world eminence and an artist who is almost unique in the manner in which he divides his time between concert stage and teaching studio. (Serkin made his American debut in Washington when the chamber music group of which his father-in-law, Adolph Busch, was first violin, was invited to appear in a concert under the auspices of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.)

* * *

TO THE Marlboro hills is attracted each summer a special coterie of young artists, somewhat older than the students at the Berkshire Music Center, and, hence, farther advanced on the practical and established side. Yet they are willing to come back to student status for the seven weeks of the term for the benefits that individual and communal application afford.

Rudolph Serkin

The seating of the string sections is no indication of the degree of advancement of the performers. The actual placement of the musicians seemed almost to be in inverse order to their status and "advanced to the rear."

The result of this exceptional situation was to assemble a group of unusually talented and equipped young aspirants, with even a few young artists with their feet well beyond the threshhold, who played with the immersion of amateurs and the tension of converts.

* * *

THE PROGRAM was all chosen from one period, starting and mainly from Vivaldi, up through Haydn and Mozart who were each represented only once. Vivaldi, a slight predecessor of Bach, wrote voluminously for string ensembles and primarily for the violin with an especial intuition for effects. There were five of his little concertos listed, all for varying instrumental requirements, and several calling for soloists.

In the opening two, the violin soloists were Michael Tree and Shmuel Ashkenasi, and the cello David Soyer. The violinists are recent contestants and place winners in some international competitions. The spirit of the evening was one full of vigor and zest, youthful speed, and an intense drive in which suavity was not considered of importance.

The conductor of the little orchestra was Alexander Schneider, known first as a violinist in the Budapest quartet but probably more widely recognized as the entrepreneur of several festivals on a global basis. Schneider conducted seated with his back to the audience, in this case a relationship true to the custom of the day of the music. He held his violin, now bowing vigorously, now swinging his bow, half-rising, leaning, doing everything but cram his contagiously zealous vim into the fingers of all his fellow-performers.

THE MUSIC produced was ardent and exhilarating. Schneider urged them to many Mannheim crescendos and never allowed the perusal to become becalmed for an instant. His own solo concerto, Vivaldi's "Il Riposo" in E flat, was played entirely with muted strings yet his solo carried remarkably and its sublime spell left the large audience hushed and breathless for long after the final note had ceased to sound, like the quiet luminescence which fans out behind a sailboat at night.

Vivaldi has come to be recognized and appreciated only in recent years. The wealth of his pages seem limitless. There is a basic similarity to much he wrote yet the opening adagio of the Sinfonia in B minor, "Al Santo Sepulchro," has an harmonic progression very much like the "shocking" beginning of Mozart's "Dissonante" quartet of 75-years later.

* * *

THE PROGRAM closed with Serkin playing the Mozart's piano concerto in A major, K414. This was Mozart at his most amiable (is the Italian 'amabile' more expressive?) and found Serkin on a plane in which he is rarely equalled. To discipline his tremendous resources to the lovable nature and smaller dimensions of this particular concerto is music-making at it's most lofty. The brilliance of the shorter idioms and the melting tone of the adagio are but two of the virtues of his playing which, to signalize, is to draw our focus from the great overall comprehension of this master.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 12 1962

Stravinsky Music To Be Featured At Seminar

TANGLEWOOD — In keeping with the 80th birthday celebration of Igor Stravinsky, the Berkshire Music Center's seminar in contemporary music Friday will be devoted to the performance and discussion of aspects of the composer's music.

The program has been arranged by Lukas Foss with the close personal advice of Stravinsky. Paul Jacobs, Fromm instructor in composition, wil present the program, and music will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players, assisted by instrumentalists from the Berkshire Music Center. The concert will be given at 3:15 Friday afternoon in the Theater Concert Hall.

The program will be divided into three parts. The first part will include: In Memoriam Dylan Thomas (1954) for tenor, string quartet and four trombones, Robert Newell, tenor, Serge Fournier, conductor; In Memoriam Raoul Dufy (1959) for string quartet; Epitaphium for Count Max Egon von Furstenberg (1959) for clarinet, flute and harp.

Linda Sanford Soloist

The second portion of Friday afternoon's program will consist of Three Pieces (1914) and the Concertino for String Quartet (1920). The final part of the concert will include two poems by Balmont (1911, orchestrated 1947); three Japanese lyrics (1913, orchestrated 1947) for string quartet, two flutes, two clarinets and piano, with Patricia Kirby, soprano soloist, and Serge Fournier, conductor; Berceuse du Chat (1915-1916) for three clarinets, Janet Pollitt, alto soloist; three songs from William Shakespeare (1953) for flute, clarinet and viola; four Russian songs (orchestrated 1954) for flute, harp, and guitar, Linda Sanford, soprano soloist, Stanley Silverman, conductor; four Pribaoutki songs (1914) for flute, oboe, English horn, clarinet, bassoon, violin, viola, cello, and bass, Louis Forner, baritone soloist, and Joel Lazar, conductor.

The Fromm Fellowship Players are Nancy Cirillo Ruggiero and Kenneth Goldsmith, violins, Jesse Levine, viola, Edgar Fischer, cello.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

and Andrew Wyeth.

First Concert By Students Tonight at 8

TANGLEWOOD — The first concert by the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, wil be given tonight at 8 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Seymour Lipkin, co-head of the department of orchestral conducting, will conduct the students in the "Incidental Music to Shakespeare's Mid summer Night's Dream," Op. 6 by Mendelssohn, and Richard Bu gin, associate conductor of th Boston Symphony, will conduc the student orchestra in a perfo mance of Shostakovich's Sym phony No. 5, Op. 47.

Friday's Aspects of Music sem inar will present a talk by Witol Lutoslawski, composer in res dence at Tanglewood this summe on the topic, "A Personal View o the History of Contemporary Mu sic."

Each of these events is open t the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The Friends' office, adja cent to the Tanglewood box office, accepts contributions for the sup port of the Music Center's schol arship funds.

TIGHT BINDING

164

FOURTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Boston Arts Quartet

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin — EUGENE LEHNER, Viola
HARRY DICKSON, Violin — RICHARD KAPUSCINSKI, Cello

PROGRAM

WEBERN — Five Quartet Pieces, Op. 5

I. Heftig bewegt; Ruhig
II. Sehr langsam
III. Sehr bewegt
IV. Sehr langsam
V. In zarten Bewegung

BERGER — String Quartet (1958)

Toccata: Preciso; Cantabile; Leggiero e sotto voce
Tranquillo; Intermezzo; Coda: Grave

INTERMISSION

SCHOENBERG — String Quartet No. 3, Op. 30

I. Moderato
II. Adagio
III. Intermezzo: Allegro moderato
IV. Rondo: Molto moderato

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:

August 1 . . . . . The New York Chamber Soloists
August 8 . . . . . Beaux Arts Trio of New York
August 15 . . . . . The Nova Arte Trio (with Gary Graffman, Piano, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute)
August 22 . . . . . The Kroll Quartet

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 26 1962

Music Review

The 12-Note School at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FOURTH event in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series was provided last night by the Fromm Music Foundation. In this first of two programs, which Paul Fromm of Chicago through his foundation will contribute to the Tanglewood season, 1,000 people were placed in a quasi-amphitheater or laboratory to watch the four experts of the Boston Arts quartet dissect and expose the music of Arnold Schoenberg, the founder of the Viennese 12-note school, his disciple, Anton Webern, and of a later-day and American adherent, Arthur Berger.

The music played stretches a little over 50 years. That of Webern, his "five movements for string quartet," opus 5, dates from 1909; the choice from Schoenberg, his third quartet, opus 30, from 1927; and Berger's his second quartet, from 1958. The two composers from the previous generation had important Berkshire contacts many years ago through the great musical patron, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who gave them both commissions which were performed at the chamber music festivals she sponsored at that time on South Mountain in Pittsfield.

* * *

THE SCHOENBERG quartet played last night was a Coolidge commission, and "the Lady Bountiful" of chamber music journeyed to Vienna for its first performance in 1927, and then the next year placed it on a program in her eighth Berkshire festival where it was played by the Gordon quartet. Mrs. Coolidge also commissioned a quartet from Webern, his opus 28, which received its very first performance at her 10th Berkshire festival in 1938, when it was played by the Kolisch quartet of which the viola was Eugen Lehner, a member of the quartet which played his opus 5 last night.

The members of the Boston Arts quartet are, with Mr. Lehner, Joseph Silverstein and Harry Dickson, violins, and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. This was a labor of deep dedication. For any or all whose receptive capacity is as limited as that of this reviewer there is no sensuous reward to such an evening. It is an intellectual adventure and the devotion the artists of the quartet displayed deserves complete ratification.

* * *

IT MIGHT even be argued that they tried too valiantly to put into the short phrases and measures a spirit either not intended or for which their instruments have been superseded by the content of the score. They immediately revealed in the five short sketches of Webern the careful preparation in which they had drilled themselves. Webern explores the stratospheric limits of the instruments in the new paths in which it pleased him to search.

The essence of the Schoenberg thesis was the abolition of tonality, at least as we understood it. This, therefore, leaves behind the joys possible in modulation and emancipates dissonance. Melody disintegrates; harmony, rhythm and otne color are carried to extremes. For one not initiated it might well appear that the composers have taken a musical Erector set and affixed spires and buttresses and ells to the extent that the stresses permit.

* * *

THE BOSTONIANS gave a remarkably clear reading to the intricacies of their evening, and faithfully followed the indications of the involvements they were assigned to pursue. At the outset, in the Webern, accuracy was achieved, no small detail, be it understood. In addition to the rhythmic pitfalls there are traps of intonation, dynamics, not only from triple "forte" to "scarcely audible" but to effects produced by bowing on the bridge, bowing with the wood, and, of course, the more routine, but here uncommonly applied, harmonics, pizzicatos, mutes and other instrumental artifices.

* * *

BUT THESE are only the means. What did the music say or convey? Paradoxically, there was more a semblance of cohesion in the music of the oldest composer represented on last night's program than on that of his followers. Webern's pieces at least had the virtue of brevity. The longest has only 55 measures; the others between 13 and 25. And while they have general admonitions for tempo and for "forcible" and "delicate" and other guides, the listening requires a concentration especially when not relieved by a more conventional interlude which leaves at least a part of the audience exhausted and drained, we can attest.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771

JUL 24 1962

—The Wednesday chamber music concert in the Tanglewood Theatre, Lenox, will be presented tomorrow under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. The Boston Arts Quartet will perform Anton Webern's Five Movement, Op. 5, the Quartet by Berger, and Schoenberg's Quartet No. 3.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158

JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799

JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191

JUL 26 1962

Polish Music Featured Friday At Tanglewood

The fourth in the series of Aspects of New Music seminars will be devoted to new Polish music. This weekly feature of the Tanglewood season is designated for the performance and discussion of contemporary music. Witold Lutoslawski, composer in residence at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, from Warsaw, Poland will present the program this Friday at 3:15 in the Theatre. Music will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

The Fromm Music Foundation's program is in its sixth year at Tanglewood. The Aspects of New Music Series is only a portion of Tanglewood concerts made possible by the Fromm Foundation. Two of the Wednesday evening chamber music concerts are presented under the auspices of the Foundation. Paul Fromm of Chicago is the founder and President of the Fromm Foundation which is dedicated to bringing the living flow of musical creation closer to the public. In this series of seminars Mr. Fromm, through his Foundation, has enabled the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center not only to listen to the music of contemporary composers, but to hear the composers themselves discuss the creation of their music.

Mr. Lutoslawski will open Friday's seminar with his own Five Pieces for Voice and Piano. Linda Sanford will be soprano soloist with Paul Jacobs, pianist. Also to be heard will be two works by Krzysztof Penderecki. His String Quartet will be performed by the Fromm string players, and Kenneth Goldsmith, violin, and Paul Jacobs, piano, will play the Miniatury for Violin and Piano. The remainder of the seminar will consist of Henryk M. Gorecki's Sonata for Two Violins with Mr. Goldsmith and Nancy Cirillo as the soloists, and the Divertimento for Four Winds (1928) by Tadeusz Baird.

All works on this program will be performed for the first time in the United States.

FIFTH C

Th

CARTER

STOCKHAUS

POWELL

BABBITT

SCHULLER

PITTSFIELD, MASS
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717

AUG 2 1962

Tanglew

by JAY C. ROSEN

THE FIFTH chamb concert in the theat hall at Tanglewood l was the second of the presented under the of the Fromm
tion. The perform members of the Chamber Soloists:
sler, tenor; Samuel
Melvin Kaplan,
Tarack, violin;
viola; Alexander
Julius Levine,
Wingreen, harp
piano.

Paul Jacobs was the society and play solos of Karl Heinz and Milton Babbitt composers, at compositions,
on the listener.
extremely well.
provides him little fact, Stockhausen former the liber
ing. Jacobs play
and VIII. of his
In the first, there a succession of out of which single thread lated by exper
the extremely lo from a lily pad of a pond depths. The and contrasts bathes to the green.

BABBITT's piano" is Stockhausen's unusual changes in his greater relia necessary by conventional es. Indeed evening the used for thei and their tru ty if at all un

TIGHT BINDING

164

FOURTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Boston Arts Quartet

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin — EUGENE LEHNER, Viola
HARRY DICKSON, Violin — RICHARD KAPUSCINSKI, Cello

PROGRAM

WEBERN — Five Quartet Pieces, Op. 5
I. Heftig bewegt; Ruhig
II. Sehr langsam
III. Sehr bewegt
IV. Sehr langsam
V. In zarten Bewegung

BERGER — String Quartet (1958)
Toccata: Preciso; Cantabile; Leggiero e sotto voce
Tranquillo; Intermezzo; Coda: Grave

INTERMISSION

SCHOENBERG — String Quartet No. 3, Op. 30
I. Moderato
II. Adagio
III. Intermezzo: Allegro moderato
IV. Rondo: Molto moderato

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:

August 1 . . . . . The New York Chamber Soloists
August 8 . . . . . Beaux Arts Trio of New York
August 15 . . . . . The Nova Arte Trio (with Gary Graffman, Piano, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute)
August 22 . . . . . The Kroll Quartet

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 26 1962

Music Review

The 12-Note School at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FOURTH event in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series was provided last night by the Fromm Music Foundation. In this first of two programs, which Paul Fromm of Chicago through his foundation will contribute to the Tanglewood season, 1,000 people were placed in a quasi-amphitheater or laboratory to watch the four experts of the Boston Arts quartet dissect and expose the music of Arnold Schoenberg, the founder of the Viennese 12-note school, his disciple, Anton Webern, and of a later-day and American adherent, Arthur Berger.

The music played stretches a little over 50 years. That of Webern, his "five movements for string quartet," opus 5, dates from 1909; the choice from Schoenberg, his third quartet, opus 30, from 1927; and Berger's his second quartet, from 1958. The two composers from the previous generation had important Berkshire contacts many years ago through the great musical patron, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who gave them both commissions which were performed at the chamber music festivals she sponsored at that time on South Mountain in Pittsfield.

* * *

THE SCHOENBERG quartet played last night was a Coolidge commission, and "the Lady Bountiful" of chamber music journeyed to Vienna for its first performance in 1927, and then the next year placed it on a program in her eighth Berkshire festival where it was played by the Gordon quartet. Mrs. Coolidge also commissioned a quartet from Webern, his opus 28, which received its very first performance at her 10th Berkshire festival in 1938, when it was played by the Kolisch quartet of which the viola was Eugen Lehner, a member of the quartet which played his opus 5 last night.

The members of the Boston Arts quartet are, with Mr. Lehner, Joseph Silverstein and Harry Dickson, violins, and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. This was a labor of deep dedication. For any or all whose receptive capacity is as limited as that of this reviewer there is no sensuous reward to such an evening. It is an intellectual adventure and the devotion the artists of the quartet displayed deserves complete ratification.

* * *

IT MIGHT even be argued that they tried too valiantly to put into the short phrases and measures a spirit either not intended or for which their instruments have been superseded by the content of the score. They immediately revealed in the five short sketches of Webern the careful preparation in which they had drilled themselves. Webern explores the stratospheric limits of the instruments in the new paths in which it pleased him to search.

The essence of the Schoenberg thesis was the abolition of tonality, at least as we understood it. This, therefore, leaves behind the joys possible in modulation and emancipates dissonance. Melody disintegrates; harmony, rhythm and otne color are carried to extremes. For one not initiated it might well appear that the composers have taken a musical Erector set and affixed spires and buttresses and ells to the extent that the stresses permit.

* * *

THE BOSTONIANS gave a remarkably clear reading to the intricacies of their evening, and faithfully followed the indications of the involvements they were assigned to pursue. From the outset, in the Webern, accuracy was achieved, no small detail, be it understood. In addition to the rhythmic pitfalls there are traps of intonation, dynamics, not only from trip "forte" to "scarcely audible" but to effects produced by bowing on the bridge, bowing with the wood, and, of course, the more routine, but here uncommonly applied, harmonics, pizzicatos, mutes and other instrumental artifices.

* * *

BUT THESE are only means. What did the music say or convey? Paradoxically, there was more a semblance of cohesion in the music of the oldest composer represented on last night's program than in that of his followers. Webern's pieces at least had the virtue of brevity. The longest has only 55 measures; the others between 13 and 25. And while they have general admonitions for tempo and for "forcible" and "delicate" and other guides, the listening requires a concentration especially when not relieved by a more conventional interlude which leaves at least a part of the audience exhausted and drained, we can attest.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
JUL 24 1962

—The Wednesday chamber music concert in the Tanglewood Theatre, Lenox, will be presented tomorrow under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. The Boston Arts Quartet will perform Anton Webern's Five Movement, Op. 5, the Quartet by Berger, and Schoenberg's Quartet, No. 3.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 6,158
JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
JUL 26 1962

Polish Music Featured Friday At Tanglewood

The fourth in the series of Aspects of New Music seminars will be devoted to new Polish music. This weekly feature of the Tanglewood season is designated for the performance and discussion of contemporary music. Witold Lutoslawski, composer in residence at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, from Warsaw, Poland will present the program this Friday at 3:15 in the Theatre. Music will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

The Fromm Music Foundation's program is in its sixth year at Tanglewood. The Aspects of New Music Series is only a portion of Tanglewood concerts made possible by the Fromm Foundation. Two of the Wednesday evening chamber music concerts are presented under the auspices of the Foundation. Paul Fromm of Chicago is the founder and President of the Fromm Foundation which is dedicated to bringing the living flow of musical creation closer to the public. In this series of seminars Mr. Fromm, through his Foundation, has enabled the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center not only to listen to the music of contemporary composers, but to hear the composers themselves discuss the creation of their music.

Mr. Lutoslawski will open Friday's seminar with his own Five Pieces for Voice and Piano. Linda Sanford will be soprano soloist with Paul Jacobs, pianist. Also to be heard will be two works by Krzyaztof Penderecki. His String Quartet will be performed by the Fromm string players, and Kenneth Goldsmith, violin, and Paul Jacobs, piano, will play the Miniatury for Violin and Piano. The remainder of the seminar will consist of Henryk M. Gorecki's Sonata for Two Violins with Mr. Goldsmith and Nancy Cirillo as the soloists, and the Divertimento for Four Winds (1928) by Tadeusz Baird.

All works on this program will be performed for the first time in the United States.

FIFTH C
Th
CARTER
STOCKHAUS
POWELL
BABBITT
SCHULLER
PITTSFIELD
BERKSHIRE
D. 28,717
AUG 2
Tang
by JAY C.
THE FIFTH concert in the hall at Tangle was the second presented und of the Fromm
tion. The members of Chamber Soloi
sler, tenor; Sa
Melvin Kapla
Tarack, viol viola; Alexan
Julius Lavine
Wingreen,
piano.
Paul Jacobs
the society and solos of Karl R and Milton Bab composers, at compositions,
on the listener
extremely well provides him lit fact, Stockhaus former the libr
ing. Jacobs pl
and VIII. of his
In the first, the a succession o out of which a single thread lated by expo the extremely from a lily p of a pond depths. The and contrast ions to the ness.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 2 1962

165

FIFTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The New York Chamber Soloists

CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor
SAMUEL BARON, Flute
MELVIN KAPLAN, Oboe
GERALD TARACK, Violin
YNEZ LYNCH, Viola
ALEXANDER KOUGUELL, Cello
JULIUS LEVINE, Bass
HARRIET WINGREEN, Piano and Harpsichord
assisted by PAUL JACOBS, Piano

PROGRAM

CARTER — Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello and Harpsichord
I. Risoluto (un poco rubato)
II. Lento
III. Allegro
Messrs. Baron, Kaplan, Kouguell, Miss Wingreen

STOCKHAUSEN — Klavierstücke V, VII
Mr. Jacobs

POWELL — Miniatures for Baroque Ensemble
Moderato
Mosso
Giusto
Brioso
Freely, but very slow
Allegro ritmico
Moderato
Energico
Messrs. Baron, Kaplan, Tarack, Kouguell, Miss Lynch and Miss Wingreen

INTERMISSION

BABBITT — Partitions for Piano
Mr. Jacobs

SCHULLER — Six Renaissance Lyrics
(First complete performance)
1. Sonnet 87: Shakespeare (1564-1616)
"Farewell, Thou art too dear for my possessing"
2. Noche oscura: Juan Delacruz (1542-1591)
"En una noche oscura"
3. Under der Linden: Walther von der Vogelweide (c. 1160-1228)
"Under der Linden an der Heiden"
4. Sonnett 126: Francesco Petrarca (1304-1374)
"In qual parte del cielo"
5. La continuation des amours #33: Pierre de Ronsard (1524-1585)
"Je vous envoie un bouquet"
6. Sonnet: Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475-1564)
"O notte, o dolce tempo"
Messrs. Bressler, Baron, Kplan, Tarack, Kouguell, Levine, Miss Lynch and Miss Wingreen

BALDWIN PIANO

FIFTH CHAMBER CONCERT GIVEN IN TANGLEWOOD

N. Y. Soloists Perform Most Ridiculous Music Heard by Critic

By WILLARD CLARK

LENOX—The fifth concert of the current chamber music series of the Berkshire Festival brought forth a group of men and women who call themselves the New York Chamber Soloists and some of the most ridiculous music I have ever heard. Apparently members of the audience felt as I do because there were considerably fewer present after the intermission than before.

Audience Divided

The audience seemed to be divided into those who profess to understand and admire such contemporary music and those who go to listen because it's part of the festival.

Because the individual players were so excellent we list their names: Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin. Inez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kougell, cello; Julius Levine, bass; Harriet Wingreen, piano and harpsichord; assisted by Paul Jacobs, piano.

The first number on the program was a sonata for flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord by Eliiot Carter. Mr. Carter is a graduate of Harvard, studied with Walter Piston and later with Nadia Boulanger in Paris. He has composed a considerable amount of music which has been performed.

The sonata here performed was composed for Sylvia Marlowe's harpsichord quartet in 1954, and won a Walter W. Naumberg Musical Foundation Award in 1956.

Not Appreciated

I cannot profess to have understood or appreciated this sonata. It sounded as though the composer had put it down on paper piecemeal with little or no regard for continuity and certainly none for melodic appeal.

Next on the program came two piano pieces by Karl Heinz Stockhausen played by Mr. Jacobs. Mr. Jacobs has a technique which apparently has been developed for this type of music. It served the music well, perhaps better than the music deserved. It appeared to be an excellent study in dynamics and pedal technique. Pretty it was not, although Mr. Jacobs got a good round of applause when it was over.

The third offering was eight miniatures for baroque ensemble by Mel Powell. It was first performed in 1959 in The Hague by the New York Chamber Soloists for whom it was written. I feel that this particular set of miniatures had more to commend it than, for example, Mr. Stockhausen's effusion. Anyway it sounded better.

Partitions for piano by Milton Babbitt was played skillfully by Mr. Jacobs. It is a stylized sort of piece, broken into many small fragments which somehow or other never seem to get together.

The final work was a song cycle by Gunther Schuller sung with considerable feeling and musicianship by tenor Charles Bressler. Vocally, the songs were challenging and I doubt if anyone with a less cultured background than Mr. Bressler could have gotten much out of them. This was the first complete performance. Each song was accompanied by a different combination of instruments.

The songs apparently pleased the audience for they were lavish with applause. Anyway those who knew what it was all about had a good time and those who didn't presumably satisfied their need for contemporary culture.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050

AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191

AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 1 1962

Chamber Soloists At Tanglewood This Evening

TANGLEWOOD — This evening's chamber music concert at Tanglewood, the second of two sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, will feature the New York Chamber Soloists assisted by Paul Jacobs, Fromm instructor in piano at the Berkshire Music Center. The program starts at 8.

Paul Fromm, president, established the Fromm Music Foundation specifically for the advancement of contemporary music. The foundation is in its seventh year of association with the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The program for tonight's concert includes Elliott Carter's Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello, and Harpsichord; Klavierstucke V, VII by Karl Stockhausen; Miniatures for Baroque Ensemble by Mel Powell; Milton Babbitt's Partitions for Piano; Six Renaissance Lyrics by Gunther Schuller. The Six Renaissance Lyrics will be given their first complete performance at this concert.

The members of the New York Chamber Soloists are Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin; Ynez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kouguell, cello; Julius Levine, bass; Harriet Wingreen, piano and harpsichord.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
28,717

AUG 2 1962

Tanglewood Experiments

by JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIFTH chamber music concert in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was the second of the two being presented under the auspices of the Fromm Musical Foundation. The performers were members of the New York Chamber Soloists: Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin; Ynez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kouguell cello; Julius Levine, bass; and Harriet Wingreen, harpsichord and piano.

Paul Jacobs was a guest of the society and played the piano solos of Karl Heinz Stockhausen and Milton Babbitt. Both these composers, at least in these compositions, place the onus on the listener. Jacobs played extremely well, but the music provides him little to project. In fact, Stockhausen gives the performer the liberty of improvising. Jacobs played numbers V and VIII. of his "Klavierstucke" In the first, there seemed to be a succession of spastic clusters out of which always lingered a single thread of tone, pedipulated by expert pedalling, like the extremely long stem which from a lily pad on the surface of a pond seeks the hidden depths. The antipodal leaps and contrasts lend a sort of bathos to the fragmentary progress.

* * *

BABBITT'S "Partitions for piano" is more fluent than Stockhausen's but there were unusual and far-reaching changes in his short episode. The greater reliance on percussive necessary by the rejection of conventional harmonic processes. Indeed during the whole evening the instruments are used for their marginal effects and their true character is rarely if at all utilized. One can well wonder if the current instruments are adequate for the expression of the thoughts seeking outlet from these composers or if they will finally resort to new conveyances to express the content of their experiments.

* * *

ELLIOTT CARTER was represented by his sonata for flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord. The performances were excellent. Carter's instrumentation proved its justification and the homogeneity of the ensemble recommended itself highly. He achieves a patina within the tone attributes of the instruments he chooses: flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord, which was highly gratifying.

Mel Powell's "Miniatures for baroque ensemble" were gay and bright although a hoe-down half way along the suite was so conventional it was out of place.

Gunther Schuller's "Six Renaissance Lyrics" were sung by tenor Bressler with fresh and easily powerful voice. He kept his intervals true in relationship to the distracting assignments of the instrumental septet which assisted him. Schuller wrote his "Six Renaissance Lyrics," which was here given its first complete performance, to poems from Shakespeare and preceding poets. We wish we could have discerned the spirit of each poem in its framework.

The Berkshire Festival should be deeply indebted to the Fromm Foundation for the two programs they have furnished the Tanglewood season. They have brought expertly prepared and performed readings of music of a type which is not on display in any other public and paid endeavor of the season's schedule. It is controversial music, and just how firmly it will be established as the years go on we are not equipped to state, but it should be within the cognizance of all who have an interest in progress.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

AUG 2 1962

Concert of Contemporary Music Attracts Many to Tanglewood

By ALAN RICH

Special to The New York Times.

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—The common image of Tanglewood — incomparable scenery framing a shrine to the musically familiar — dissipates somewhat between the festive week-ends. Then the audiences are pared down to the truly dedicated, and the musical fare becomes more adventurous.

A prime mover in this direction is the Fromm Foundation, which underwrites a great deal of the contemporary music activity at Tanglewood. This summer the foundation has sponsored seminars, forums, fellowships for performers and concerts.

Tonight the second of two concerts of contemporary music took place.

The program consisted of nothing but hard music, and it was heard with enthusiasm by a large and hardy audience that almost filled the 1,200-seat theatre-concert hall. Even a pair of barn swallows, sporting high above the stage during most of the concert, seemed unusually peppy.

The program opened with the acidulous but high-spirited Sonata for Flute, Oboe, 'Cello and Harpsichord by Elliot Carter. This was also the one familiar work on the program, thanks to a recent recording. It is a work that grows lovelier on repeated hearings, and especially as it was played tonight.

The performers, members of the New York Chamber Soloists, were Samuel Baron, Melvin Kaplan, Alexander Kouguell and Harriet Wingreen.

Then came two of Karlheinz Stockhausen's earliest piano works using elements of musical chance, the Klavierstuecke 5 and 7, punched out with enormous vigor by Paul Jacobs, one of this summer's Fromm Fellowship players. Mr. Jacobs, very much a man of his age, seems to have the technical and intellectual ability to approach this music with the facility that men of other ages applied to Czerny études.

Mel Powell's eight miniatures for baroque ensemble were charming bits of color and shade, again set forth with authority by the same players that had illuminated the Carter work, plus Gerald Tarack, violinist, and Ynez Lynch, violist.

Mr. Jacobs returned after the intermission with another tense and compact work, Milton Babbitt's "Partitions." Mr. Babbitt's music does not yield its secrets readily, but the energy contained in this piece seemed on one hearing rather stunning. And, as with all his scores, the composer writes with a remarkable sense of color and shape.

The one truly new work on the program was Gunther Schuller's Six Renaissance Lyrics, which received its first complete performance.

Mr. Schuller has set antique poetry by French, German, Italian and English authors in a highly dissonant style. At the same time, he has accomplished a striking feat in preserving in his music a sense of the old. Textures, in particular, have a way of looking back as well as forward, and there are touches in the melodic line of the kind of flourish common in old music.

It is an exotic and quite beautiful work that Mr. Schuller has produced here. The vocal line seems especially strong, clearly and logically shaped, and the interweaving of voice and instruments is constantly fascinating.

Charles Bressler sang the words with his accustomed fine artistry, and once again the Chamber Soloists, with Miss Wingreen this time at the piano and with Julius Levine, bassist, completing the ensemble, made wonderful sounds.

FIFTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The New York Chamber Soloists

CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor
SAMUEL BARON, Flute
MELVIN KAPLAN, Oboe
GERALD TARACK, Violin
YNEZ LYNCH, Viola
ALEXANDER KOUGUELL, Cello
JULIUS LEVINE, Bass
HARRIET WINGREEN, Piano and Harpsichord
assisted by PAUL JACOBS, Piano

PROGRAM

CARTER — Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello and Harpsichord
I. Risoluto (un poco rubato)
II. Lento
III. Allegro
Messrs. Baron, Kaplan, Kouguell, Miss Wingreen

STOCKHAUSEN — Klavierstücke V, VII
Mr. Jacobs

POWELL — Miniatures for Baroque Ensemble
Moderato
Mosso
Giusto
Brioso
Freely, but very slow
Allegro ritmico
Moderato
Energico
Messrs. Baron, Kaplan, Tarack, Kouguell, Miss Lynch and Miss Wingreen

INTERMISSION

BABBITT — Partitions for Piano
Mr. Jacobs

SCHULLER — Six Renaissance Lyrics
(First complete performance)
1. Sonnet 87: Shakespeare (1564-1616)
"Farewell, Thou art too dear for my possessing"
2. Noche oscura: Juan Delacruz (1542-1591)
"En una noche oscura"
3. Under der Linden: Walther von der Vogelweide (c. 1160-1228)
"Under der Linden an der Heiden"
4. Sonnett 126: Francesco Petrarca (1304-1374)
"In qual parte del cielo"
5. La continuation des amours #33: Pierre de Ronsard (1524-1585)
"Je vous envoie un bouquet"
6. Sonnet: Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475-1564)
"O notte, o dolce tempo"
Messrs. Bressler, Baron, Kplan, Tarack, Kouguell, Levine, Miss Lynch and Miss Wingreen

BALDWIN PIANO

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 2 1962

FIFTH CHAMBER CONCERT GIVEN IN TANGLEWOOD

N. Y. Soloists Perform Most Ridiculous Music Heard by Critic

By WILLARD CLARK

LENOX—The fifth concert of the current chamber music series of the Berkshire Festival brought forth a group of men and women who call themselves the New York Chamber Soloists and some of the most ridiculous music I have ever heard. Apparently members of the audience felt as I do because there were considerably fewer present after the intermission than before.

Audience Divided

The audience seemed to be divided into those who profess to understand and admire such contemporary music and those who go to listen because it's part of the festival.

Because the individual players were so excellent we list their names: Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin. Inez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kougell, cello; Julius Levine, bass; Harriet Wingreen, piano and harpsichord; assisted by Paul Jacobs, piano.

The first number on the program was a sonata for flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord by Elliot Carter. Mr. Carter is a graduate of Harvard, studied with Walter Piston and later with Nadia Boulanger in Paris. He has composed a considerable amount of music which has been performed.

The sonata here performed was composed for Sylvia Marlowe's harpsichord quartet in 1954, and won a Walter W. Naumberg Musical Foundation Award in 1956.

Not Appreciated

I cannot profess to have understood or appreciated this sonata. It sounded as though the composer had put it down on paper piecemeal with little or no regard for continuity and certainly none for melodic appeal.

Next on the program came two piano pieces by Karl Heinz Stockhausen played by Mr. Jacobs. Mr. Jacobs has a technique which apparently has been developed for this type of music. It served the music well, perhaps better than the music deserved. It appeared to be an excellent study in dynamics and pedal technique. Pretty it was not, although Mr. Jacobs got a good round of applause when it was over.

The third offering was eight miniatures for baroque ensemble by Mel Powell. It was first performed in 1959 in The Hague by the New York Chamber Soloists for whom it was written. I feel that this particular set of miniatures had more to commend it than, for example, Mr. Stockhausen's effusion. Anyway it sounded better.

Partitions for piano by Milton Babbitt was played skillfully by Mr. Jacobs. It is a stylized sort of piece, broken into many small fragments which somehow or other never seem to get together.

The final work was a song cycle by Gunther Schuller sung with considerable feeling and musicianship by tenor Charles Bressler. Vocally, the songs were challenging and I doubt if anyone with a less cultured background than Mr. Bressler could have gotten much out of them. This was the first complete performance. Each song was accompanied by a different combination of instruments.

The songs apparently pleased the audience for they were lavish with applause. Anyway those who knew what it was all about had a good time and those who didn't presumably satisfied their need for contemporary culture.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 1 1962

Chamber Soloists At Tanglewood This Evening

TANGLEWOOD — This evening's chamber music concert at Tanglewood, the second of two sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, will feature the New York Chamber Soloists assisted by Paul Jacobs, Fromm instructor in piano at the Berkshire Music Center. The program starts at 8.

Paul Fromm, president, established the Fromm Music Foundation specifically for the advancement of contemporary music. The foundation is in its seventh year of association with the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The program for tonight's concert includes Elliott Carter's Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello, and Harpsichord; Klavierstucke V, VII by Karl Stockhausen; Miniatures for Baroque Ensemble by Mel Powell; Milton Babbitt's Partitions for Piano; Six Renaissance Lyrics by Gunther Schuller. The Six Renaissance Lyrics will be given their first complete performance at this concert.

The members of the New York Chamber Soloists are Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin; Ynez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kouguell, cello; Julius Levine, bass; Harriet Wingreen, piano and harpsichord.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717
AUG 2 1962

Tanglewood Experiments

by JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIFTH chamber music concert in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was the second of the two being presented under the auspices of the Fromm Musical Foundation. The performers were members of the New York Chamber Soloists: Charles Bressler, tenor; Samuel Baron, flute; Melvin Kaplan, oboe; Gerald Tarack, violin; Ynez Lynch, viola; Alexander Kouguell cello; Julius Levine, bass; and Harriet Wingreen, harpsichord and piano.

Paul Jacobs was a guest of the society and played the piano solos of Karl Heinz Stockhausen and Milton Babbitt. Both these composers, at least in these compositions, place the onus on the listener. Jacobs played extremely well, but the music provides him little to project. In fact, Stockhausen gives the performer the liberty of improvising. Jacobs played numbers V and VIII. of his "Klavierstucke" In the first, there seemed to be a succession of spastic clusters out of which always lingered a single thread of tone, podipulated by expert pedalling, like the extremely long stem which from a lily pad on the surface of a pond seeks the hidden depths. The antipodal leaps and contrasts lend a sort of portion to the fragmentary progress.

* * *

BABBITT'S "Partitions for piano" is more fluent than Stockhausen's but there were unusual and far-reaching changes in his short episode. The greater reliance on percussive necessary by the rejection of conventional harmonic processes. Indeed during the whole evening the instruments are used for their marginal effects and their true character is rarely if at all utilized. One can well wonder if the current instruments are adequate for the expression of the thoughts seeking outlet from these composers or if they will finally resort to new conveyances to express the content of their experiments.

* * *

ELLIOTT CARTER was represented by his sonata for flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord. The performances were excellent, Carter's instrumentation proved its justification and the homogeneity of the ensemble recommended itself highly. He achieves a patina within the tone attributes of the instruments he chooses: flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord, which was highly gratifying.

Mel Powell's "Miniatures for baroque ensemble" were gay and bright although a hoe-down half way along the suite was so conventional it was out of place.

Gunther Schuller's "Six Renaissance Lyrics" were sung by tenor Bressler with fresh and easily powerful voice. He kept his intervals true in relationship to the distracting assignments of the instrumental septet which assisted him. Schuller wrote his "Six Renaissance Lyrics," which was here given its first complete performance, to poems from Shakespeare and preceding poets. We wish we could have discerned the spirit of each poem in its framework.

The Berkshire Festival should be deeply indebted to the Fromm Foundation for the two programs they have furnished the Tanglewood season. They have brought expertly prepared and performed readings of music of a type which is not on display in any other public and paid endeaver of the season's schedule. It is controversial music, and just how firmly it will be established as the years go on we are not equipped to state, but it should be within the cognizence of all who have an interest in progress.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,308,418
AUG 2 1962

Concert of Contemporary Music Attracts Many to Tanglewood

Boston Symphony

By JOAN RICH

Special to The New York Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—The common image of Tanglewood — incomparable scenery framing a shrine to the musically familiar — dissipates somewhat between the festive week-ends. Then the audiences are pared down to the truly dedicated, and the musical fare becomes more adventurous.

A prime mover in this direction is the Fromm Foundation, which underwrites a great deal of the contemporary music activity at Tanglewood. This summer the foundation has sponsored seminars, forums, fellowships for performers and concerts.

Tonight the second of two concerts of contemporary music took place.

The program consisted of nothing but hard music, and it was heard with enthusiasm by a large and hardy audience that almost filled the 1,200-seat theatre-concert hall. Even a pair of barn swallows, sporting high above the stage during most of the concert, seemed unusually peppy.

The program opened with the acidulous but high-spirited Sonata for Flute, Oboe, 'Cello and Harpsichord by Elliot Carter. This was also the one familiar work on the program, thanks to a recent recording. It is a work that grows lovelier on repeated hearings, and especially as it was played tonight.

The performers, members of the New York Chamber Soloists, were Samuel Baron, Melvin Kaplan, Alexander Kouguell and Harriet Wingreen.

Then came two of Karlheinz Stockhausen's earliest piano works using elements of musical chance, the Klavierstuecke 5 and 7, punched out with enormous vigor by Paul Jacobs, one of this summer's Fromm Fellowship players. Mr. Jacobs, very much a man of his age, seems to have the technical and intellectual ability to approach this music with the facility that men of other ages applied to Czerny études.

Mel Powell's eight miniatures for baroque ensemble were charming bits of color and shade, again set forth with authority by the same players that had illuminated the Carter work, plus Gerald Tarack, violinist, and Ynez Lynch, violist.

Mr. Jacobs returned after the intermission with another tense and compact work, Milton Babbitt's "Partitions." Mr. Babbitt's music does not yield its secrets readily, but the energy contained in this piece seemed on one hearing rather stunning. And, as with all his scores, the composer writes with a remarkable sense of color and shape.

The one truly new work on the program was Gunther Schuller's Six Renaissance Lyrics, which received its first complete performance.

Mr. Schuller has set antique poetry by French, German, Italian and English authors in a highly dissonant style. At the same time, he has accomplished a striking feat in preserving in his music a sense of the old. Textures, in particular, have a way of looking back as well as forward, and there are touches in the melodic line of the kind of flourish common in old music.

It is an exotic and quite beautiful work that Mr. Schuller has produced here. The vocal line seems especially strong, clearly and logically shaped, and the interweaving of voice and instruments is constantly fascinating.

Charles Bressler sang the words with his accustomed fine artistry, and once again the Chamber Soloists, with Miss Wingreen this time at the piano and with Julius Levine, bassist, completing the ensemble, made wonderful sounds.

166

SIXTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York

MENAHEM PRESSLER, Piano

DANIEL GUILET, Violin

BERNARD GREENHOUSE, Cello

•

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN — Trio in D Major, Opus 70, No. 1

I. Allegro vivace
II. Largo assai e espressivo
III. Presto

DIAMOND — Trio

I. Poco allegro; maestoso; Adagio; Allegro vivo
II. Adagio meditativo; Poco andantino, quasi allegretto; Tempo I
III. Scherzo: Allegro aperto
IV. Adagio serio; Allegro animato

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS — Trio in C Major, Opus 87

I. Allegro
II. Andante con moto (Thema mit Variationen)
III. Scherzo: Presto
IV. Finale: Allegro giocoso

STEINWAY PIANO

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:

August 15 . . . . . The Nova Arte Trio (with Gary Graffman, Piano, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute)

August 22 . . . . . The Kroll Quartet

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 9 1962

Music Review

The Beaux Arts Trio

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BEAUX Arts Trio of New York, making what has become an annual event in the chamber music series at Tanglewood, last night played a well-constructed program of two of the great 19th century masterpieces with a contemporary work sandwiched in between.

The numbers of the trio are Menahem Pressler, piano, Daniel Guilet, violin, and Bernard Greenhouse, cello. Their conception of the Beethoven D major, opus 70, No. 1, and of the Brahms C major, opus 87, was on large and grand over-all patterns. The trio of David Diamond, written only 10 years ago, did not reward the audience even from the hands of the artists whose efforts in the other works earned them explosions of applause.

They violated the hitherto accepted rule of no encores by adding excerpts from two additional quartets at the conclusion of the printed list. There was no doubt that the audience demanded them and as well enjoyed them, but we wish they had departed at the conclusion of their original contract. No one withholds esteem from the scherzo of the Mendelssohn trio, opus 49, nor from the exhibit of the Dvorak Dumky trio, but they were played as sweetmeats after what they evidently considered an insufficiently satisfying display of their talents.

* * *

FEW PIANISTS adjust their keyboard to strings to equal Pressler, and the tonal splendor he can achieve in some of the most effective melodies approaches vocalism at its best. Greenhouse's tone is warm and powerful and complements the ensemble completely. Only the violinist plays his instrument as such. To hear Pressler do the second and tranquil theme of the Brahms with liquid symmetry and then to hear the violin mar the same theme, in turn, by audible slides is something we might tolerate if it were not for an audience composed in great part of students of the Berkshire Music Center and other students from many of the music camps in the vicinity, who might think this is a manner to be emulated.

Diamond's trio is in four restless movements, changing moods and colors repeatedly, and revealing an imagination which, on first hearing, lacks discipline. A rhapsodic phrase at the beginning of the first movement ushers in majestic, agitated and solemn episodes, and a variety of events which might well be a narrative or adaptable to choreography. Greenhouse played the cello theme in the second movement with vibrant sonority and Pressler scrambled over the piano with remarkable dexterity.

* * *

THE BRAHMS scherzo was a virtuoso feat to which all three members of the trio contributed in equal shares. The maintenance of a hushed, fairy-like, spider-web tonal texture at such fantastic speed was impressive. Pressler did the largo theme in the Beethoven with the utmost grace and taste, but we wonder if the "sotto voce" preceding idiom was intended to be played by the strings with such weary tonal stares. The cello insterted a degree of vibrato so that the piano had validity in its plaintive pathos, but the dialogue was scarcely sympathetic.

Few performances have evoked such spontaneous expressions of approval as the familiar parts of the program last night.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 1962

Beaux Arts At Festival This Evening

Ormandy, Monteux Join Munch Over Weekend

TANGLEWOOD — The Beaux Arts Trio will be heard in a chamber music concert in the theater tonight at 8 for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The trio, which has performed many times at these Wednesday night concerts, includes Menahem Pressler, pianist; Daniel Guilet, violinist; and Bernard Greenhouse, cellist. Their program will include Beethoven's Trio, Opus 70, No. 1; the Trio by Diamond; and Brahms' Trio, Opus 87.

BMC Events

Tomorrow afternoon at 4, a program of chamber music by the Berkshire Music Center students will be presented in the theater, and in the evening, also in the theater, the Tanglewood composers will present a composers' forum. The Aspects of Music seminar on Friday at 3:15 will consider New British music, with Iain Hamilton, composer in residence here, presiding. The regular BMC chamber music concert will take place Sunday morning at 10.

The sixth week of major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will open Friday night at 8. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the BSO, opening the program with Beethoven's Egmont Overture. The balance of the program will include the Symphony No. 3 "Eroica," by Beethoven, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Monteux Saturday

Pierre Monteux will return to the Music Shed Saturday evening at 8 for the second of three appearances this season as guest conductor of the BSO. Mr. Monteux has invited Leon Fleisher to be his guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major by Brahms. The piano concerto will be preceded by the prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," by Wagner, and Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme.

Prior to the evening concert, there will be an open rehearsal that morning at 10 for the benefit of the BSO pension fund.

Tanglewood Premiere

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Sunday afternoon's concert at 2:30, presenting the Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's symphony, which had its world premiere by Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony in Boston on March 23. Mr. Fine is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. He is currently on the faculty of Brandeis University.

Dr. Munch has chosen to open Sunday's concert with Rameau's Suite from the opera, "Dardanus," to be followed by Fine's symphony. The program will conclude with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 9 1962

TRIO OFFERS PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Beaux Arts Group Plays Before 1227; Ormandy Conducts Friday

LENOX—The Beaux Arts Trio, which has appeared on numerous occasions at chamber music events at Tanglewood, performed Wednesday night in the Theater Concert Hall before an audience of 1227, compared with 1307 on the same night a year ago.

The trio—made up of Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin, and Bernard Greenhouse, cello—performed works by Beethoven, Diamond and Brahms. The program opened with Beethoven's "Trio in D Major, Opus 70," followed by Diamond's "Trio for Violin, Cello and Piano." The program closed with Brahms' "Trio in C Major, Opus 87."

Eugene Ormandy will be on the podium in the Music Shed Friday night at 8, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open the program with Beethoven's "Egmont Overture." The balance of the concert will include the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica, by Beethoven and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

Pierre Monteux will make his second appearance of the festival season Saturday night as guest conductor in the Shed. He has invited Leon Fleisher to be his guest in a performance of Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major." The concerto will be preceded by the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," by Wagner and Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 9 1962

Tanglewood

Beaux Arts Trio Well Rewards Its Audience

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York with Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin and Bernard Greenhouse, cello, performed in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the sixth concert of the Chamber Music Series last night. The good sized audience, braving both strong, cool breezes and the veiled threat of rain, was most amply rewarded.

Though the trio is not a very popular idiom for modern day composers, David Diamond's Trio in four movements goes a long way toward making it amenable to contemporary style and spirit. Despite the natural dignity inherent in the better trios and the clumsy result of those which pursue high-flown effects, Diamond's trio gets away with murder. The third movement scherzo, like a wise bit of New York, while a contradiction of the group, is at the same time a startling success. He does not always have such good fortune as in the first poco allegro and maestoso, where the three instruments do not seem large enough to contain all his intended ideas.

The fine musicianship that bolstered the success of this concert was most notable in the contained sensitivity of Mr. Greenhouse's cello, whose prominent part in the Diamond adagio of the second movement and the constancy of intelligent musicianship in all of the glowing Brahms trio, made an impression that remained long after the concert was over. The pianist, Mr. Pressler, has a most magnificient sense of balance and blend, except where sforzandos become occasionally percussive marcato passages and overpower the sustaining tones of the strings.

The Beethoven Trio in D Major was slightly marred by some intonation difficulties, especially when the violin and cello were playing in octaves the theme of the second movement to the soft answering voice of the piano. However, the whole movement with its low piano rumblings was yet the expressive and dramatic impression of gloom and doom. The presto, though no doubt part by comparison to the second movement, appeared to disregard the delicate musical texture and results in a thin and rather pointless finale, despite very fine trio playing.

The Trio in C Major by Brahms was the major success of the evening. The darker harmonies and fuller compositions were, curiously enough, still more luminous than in either of the preceding works. The strong emotional rhythms of the second movement marked andante con moto, with its gypsy-sounding variations was paced and balanced throughout with a performance that comes only with a most practiced and intelligent musicianship. The careful contrasts of the five variations in shift of importance of accompaniment and main thematic content among the three instruments boosted the attention of the listener and enlivened his enjoyment.

Next Wednesday the Nova Arte Trio with Mr. Graffman, piano and Mrs. Dwyer, flute, will perform Prokofiev's Flute Sonata, Mozart's Divertimento, K 563, and the Brahms Piano Quartet, Opus 26.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1962

BMC Orchestra To Give Concert In Shed Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — Pierre Hetu of Paris, France, will conduct the opening work in tonight's Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at Tanglewood. Mr. Hetu will direct the orchestra in a performance of Brahms' Tragic Overture, Op. 81. The Sinfonie Concertante, Op. 84, by Haydn, will be conducted by Satoko Takemae of Tokyo, Japan. The final work prior to intermission is to be conducted by Serge Fournier, also of Paris, who will lead the students in the Prelude and "Love Death" from Richard Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

A entire performance of Mendelssohn's Symhony No. 3 in A minor (Scotch) will take place after the intermission and be conducted by Theodore Avitahl, a Roumanian refugee, now residing in New York.

Concerts Tuesdays

Contrary to previous announcements, the student orchestra concert scheduled for Monday, Aug. 13, will not be held. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra's remaining concerts are to be on Tuesday, Aug. 14; Tuesday, Aug. 21; and on Gala Evening, Thursday, Aug. 23, when Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. Florence Kopleff will be the soloist for this concert.

With the exception of the Gala Evening, the student performances at Tanglewood are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

166

SIXTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York

MENAHEM PRESSLER, Piano

DANIEL GUILET, Violin

BERNARD GREENHOUSE, Cello

•

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN — Trio in D Major, Opus 70, No. 1

I. Allegro vivace
II. Largo assai e espressivo
III. Presto

DIAMOND — Trio

I. Poco allegro; maestoso; Adagio; Allegro vivo
II. Adagio meditativo; Poco andantino, quasi allegretto; Tempo I
III. Scherzo: Allegro aperto
IV. Adagio serio; Allegro animato

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS — Trio in C Major, Opus 87

I. Allegro
II. Andante con moto (Thema mit Variationen)
III. Scherzo: Presto
IV. Finale: Allegro giocoso

STEINWAY PIANO

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:

August 15 . . . . . The Nova Arte Trio (with Gary Graffman, Piano, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute)

August 22 . . . . . The Kroll Quartet

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 9 1962

Music Review

The Beaux Arts Trio

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BEAUX Arts Trio of New York, making what has become an annual event in the chamber music series at Tanglewood, last night played a well-constructed program of two of the great 19th century masterpieces with a contemporary work sandwiched in between.

The members of the trio are Menahem Pressler, piano, Daniel Guilet, violin, and Bernard Greenhouse, cello. Their conception of the Beethoven D major, opus 70, No. 1, and of the Brahms C major, opus 87, was on large and grand over-all patterns. The trio of David Diamond, written only 10 years ago, did not reward the audience even from the hands of the artists whose efforts in the other works earned them explosions of applause.

They violated the hitherto accepted rule of no encores by adding excerpts from two additional quartets at the conclusion of the printed list. There was no doubt that the audience demanded them and as well enjoyed them, but we wish they had departed at the conclusion of their original contract. No one withholds esteem from the scherzo of the Mendelssohn trio, opus 49, nor from the exhibit of the Dvorak Dumky trio, but they were played as sweetmeats after what they evidently considered an insufficiently satisfying display of their talents.

• • •

FEW PIANISTS adjust their keyboard to strings to equal Pressler, and the tonal splendor he can achieve in some of the most effective melodies approaches vocalism at its best. Greenhouse's tone is warm and powerful and complements the ensemble completely. Only the violinist plays his instrument as such. To hear Pressler do the second and tranquil theme of the Brahms with liquid symmetry and then to hear the violin mar the same theme, in turn, by audible slides is something we might tolerate if it were not for an audience composed in great part of students of the Berkshire Music Center and other students from many of the music camps in the vicinity, who might think this is a manner to be emulated.

Diamond's trio is in four restless movements, changing moods and colors repeatedly, and revealing an imagination which, on first hearing, lacks discipline. A rhapsodic phrase at the beginning of the first movement ushers in majestic, agitated and solemn episodes, and a variety of events which might well be a narrative or adaptable to choreography. Greenhouse played the cello theme in the second movement with vibrant sonority and Pressler scrambled over the piano with remarkable dexterity.

• • •

THE BRAHMS scherzo was a virtuoso feat to which all three members of the trio contributed in equal shares. The maintenance of a hushed, fairy-like, spider-web tonal texture at such fantastic speed was impressive. Pressler did the large theme in the Beethoven with the utmost grace and taste, but we wonder if the "sotto voce" preceding idiom was intended to be played by the strings with such weary tonal stares. The cello insterted a degree of vibrato so that the piano had validity in its plaintive pathos, but the dialogue was scarcely sympathetic.

Few performances have evoked such spontaneous expressions of approval as the familiar parts of the program last night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 8 1962

Beaux Arts At Festival This Evening

Ormandy, Monteux Join Munch Over Weekend

TANGLEWOOD — The Beaux Arts Trio will be heard in a chamber music concert in the theater tonight at 8 for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The trio, which has performed many times at these Wednesday night concerts, includes Menahem Pressler, pianist; Daniel Guilet, violinist; and Bernard Greenhouse, cellist. Their program will include Beethoven's Trio, Opus 70, No. 1; the Trio by Diamond; and Brahms' Trio, Opus 87.

BMC Events

Tomorrow afternoon at 4, a program of chamber music by the Berkshire Music Center students will be presented in the theater, and in the evening, also in the theater, the Tanglewood composers will present a composers' forum. The Aspects of Music seminar on Friday at 3:15 will consider New British music, with Iain Hamilton, composer in residence here, presiding. The regular BMC chamber music concert will take place Sunday morning at 10.

The sixth week of major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will open Friday night at 8. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the BSO, opening the program with Beethoven's Egmont Overture. The balance of the program will include the Symphony No. 3 "Eroica," by Beethoven, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Monteux Saturday

Pierre Monteux will return to the Music Shed Saturday evening at 8 for the second of three appearances this season as guest conductor of the BSO. Mr. Monteux has invited Leon Fleisher to be his guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major by Brahms. The piano concerto will be preceded by the prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," by Wagner, and Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme.

Prior to the evening concert, there will be an open rehearsal that morning at 10 for the benefit of the BSO pension fund.

Tanglewood Premiere

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Sunday afternoon's concert at 2:30, presenting the Tanglewood premiere of Irving Fine's symphony, which had its world premiere by Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony in Boston on March 23. Mr. Fine is a former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. He is currently on the faculty of Brandeis University.

Dr. Munch has chosen to open Sunday's concert with Rameau's Suite from the opera, "Dardanus," to be followed by Fine's symphony. The program will conclude with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 9 1962

TRIO OFFERS PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Beaux Arts Group Plays Before 1227; Ormandy Conducts Friday

LENOX—The Beaux Arts Trio, which has appeared on numerous occasions at chamber music events at Tanglewood, performed Wednesday night in the Theater Concert Hall before an audience of 1227, compared with 1307 on the same night a year ago.

The trio—made up of Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin, and Bernard Greenhouse, cello—performed works by Beethoven, Diamond and Brahms. The program opened with Beethoven's "Trio in D Major, Opus 70," followed by Diamond's "Trio for Violin, Cello and Piano." The program closed with Brahms' "Trio in C Major, Opus 87."

Eugene Ormandy will be on the podium in the Music Shed Friday night at 8, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open the program with Beethoven's "Egmont Overture." The balance of the concert will include the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

Pierre Monteux will make his second appearance of the festival season Saturday night as guest conductor in the Shed. He has invited Leon Fleisher to be his guest in a performance of Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major." The concerto will be preceded by the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," by Wagner and Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 9 1962

Tanglewood

Beaux Arts Trio Well Rewards Its Audience

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York with Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin and Bernard Greenhouse, cello, performed in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the sixth concert of the Chamber Music Series last night. The good sized audience, braving both strong, cool breezes and the veiled threat of rain, was most amply rewarded.

Though the trio is not a very popular idiom for modern day composers, David Diamond's Trio in four movements goes a long way toward making it amenable to contemporary style and spirit. Despite the natural dignity inherent in the better trios and the clumsy result of those which pursue high-flown effects, Diamond's trio gets away with murder. The third movement scherzo, like a wise bit of New York while a contradiction of the group, is at the same time a startling success. He does not always have such good fortune as in the first poco allegro and maestoso, where the three instruments do not seem large enough to contain all his intended ideas.

The fine musicianship that bolstered the success of this concert was most notable in the contained sensitivity of Mr. Greenhouse's cello, whose prominent part in the Diamond adagio of the second movement and the constancy of intelligent musicianship in all of the glowing Brahms trio, made an impression that remained long after the concert was over. The pianist, Mr. Pressler, has a most magnificient sense of balance and blend, except where sforzandos become occasionally percussive marcato passages and overpower the sustaining tones of the strings.

The Beethoven Trio in D Major was slightly marred by some intonation difficulties, especially when the violin and cello were playing in octaves the theme of the second movement to the soft answering voice of the piano. However, the whole movement with its low piano rumblings was yet the expressive and dramatic impression of gloom and doom. The presto, though no doubt part by comparison to the second movement, appeared to disregard the delicate musical texture and results in a thin and rather pointless finale, despite very fine trio playing.

The Trio in C Major by Brahms was the major success of the evening. The darker harmonies and fuller compositions were, curiously enough, still more luminous than in either of the preceding works. The strong emotional rhythms of the second movement marked andante con moto, with its gypsy-sounding variations was paced and balanced throughout with a performance that comes only with a most practiced and intelligent musicianship. The careful contrasts of the five variations in shift of importance of accompaniment and main thematic content among the three instruments boosted the attention of the listener and enlivened his enjoyment.

Next Wednesday the Nova Arte Trio with Mr. Graffman, piano and Mrs. Dwyer, flute, will perform Prokofiev's Flute Sonata, Mozart's Divertimento, K 563, and the Brahms Piano Quartet, Opus 26.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1962

BMC Orchestra To Give Concert In Shed Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — Pierre Hetu of Paris, France, will conduct the opening work in tonight's Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at Tanglewood. Mr. Hetu will direct the orchestra in a performance of Brahms' Tragic Overture, Op. 81. The Sinfonie Concertante, Op. 84, by Haydn, will be conducted by Satoko Takemae of Tokyo, Japan. The final work prior to intermission is to be conducted by Serge Fournier, also of Paris, who will lead the students in the Prelude and "Love Death" from Richard Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

A entire performance of Mendelssohn's Symhony No. 3 in A minor (Scotch) will take place after the intermission and be conducted by Theodore Avitahl, a Roumanian refugee, now residing in New York.

Concerts Tuesdays

Contrary to previous announcements, the student orchestra concert scheduled for Monday, Aug. 13, will not be held. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra's remaining concerts are to be on Tuesday, Aug. 14; Tuesday, Aug. 21; and on Gala Evening, Thursday, Aug. 23, when Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. Florence Kopleff will be the soloist for this concert.

With the exception of the Gala Evening, the student performances at Tanglewood are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Nova Arte Trio

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola
SAMUEL MAYES, Cello
assisted by
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, Flute
GARY GRAFFMAN, Piano

PROGRAM

BRAHMS — Quartet for Piano and Strings, in A major, Op. 26

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Poco allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro

PROKOFIEV — Sonata for Fute and Piano, Op. 94

I. Andantino
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Andante
IV. Allegro con brio

INTERMISSION

MOZART — Divertimento for String Trio, K. 563

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro
IV. Andante
V. Menuetto. Allegretto
VI. Allegro

Mr. Graffman plays the Steinway Piano.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
AUG 20 1962

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
AUG 26 1962

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 17 1962

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
AUG 20 1962

Tanglewood To Present New Music

Lukas Foss, acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Department of Composition, has arranged a program of recent European and American music to be presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation at Tanglewood (in Lenox), at 3:15 p. m. on Friday. Mr. Foss, in speaking of this concert said, "This is the most advanced program we have ever had at Tanglewood."

Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players, and the program will consist of Evocations by Shapey, Hersch's Quartet, Morton Feldman's "For Franz Kline", Available Forms No. 3 by Earl Brown, Tropi by Castiglioni, and Goulez' Piano Sonata No. 3.

The piece by Earl Brown, Available Forms No. 3, was composed especially for this concert at Tanglewood and will be conducted by the composer. Mr. Brown, Morton Feldman, and Ralph Shapey will each give a short analysis of their works.

Earlier concerts in this new music series have included an all-Stravinskky program, and concerts of new Polish music presented by Witold Lutoslawski and new British music presented by Iain Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Lutoslawski are guest composers in residence at Tanglewood this summer.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 16 1962

MUSIC LIFTED TO HEIGHTS AT TANGLEWOOD

Nova Arte Trio Plays Great String Works in Grand Manner

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Great music for strings played in the grand manner was offered by the Nova Arte Trio at the weekly chamber music concert in the Theater at Tanglewood Wednesday night.

Virtuosi of BSO

Participants were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Joseph De Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes, cello, assisted by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Gary Graffman, piano. All are virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra except pianist Graffman, who on Sunday afternoon will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This was an evening in which everyone had a good time or should have had a good time, for one listened to perfectly balanced performances and a meticulous musicianship which lifted the music to its very heights. There was no pounding, yet every point was made clear. It was one for all and all for one.

The opening number was the Brahms "Quartet for Piano and Strings in A Major," Op. 26, a work in which this master melodist was at his finest. Tune after tune flowed its melodious way without pause. Never for a moment was the melodic line allowed to lie dormant. It was perfectly evident that the performers were having as good a time as the listeners. They seemed almost introspective as they wound their way through the music. An introspection in public performance is not too often found. Therefore we had a feeling that this music came to us from the inside.

Perfect Balance

Graffman is a chamber pianist par excellence. He maintains a perfect balance and is always in the mood. He can also color his tone to match any in the ensemble. The other members of the quartet are old hands at this sort of music and they brought to it their prodigious musicianship and long experience, giving freely of their knowledge so that the Brahms of today might be as great as the Brahms of yesterday. He was.

Tanglewood audiences have always had their favorites among the soloists who appear before them. It would be a gross understatement if one should say Mrs. Dwyer was less than the favorite of all the festivals I have attended. Young, vastly attractive, modest and a musician to her dainty fingertips, she has about everything that an audience would want and she gives of her wares in abundance but not with abandon, for her musicianship is impeccable and her feeling for the music she plays very profound.

She offered, with the expert assistance of Graffman, a performance of the Prokofiev "Sonata for Flute and Piano," Op. 94. This is a joyous piece, loaded with intriguing dance rhythms and Russian tunes. Graffman maintained his usual discreet and sensitive collaboration and the result was both joyous to the ear and pretty good for the soul. Anyway, the audience seemed to like it for there were bravos all over the hall.

From the piquant beauties of Prokofiev we turned to one of the great masterpieces in chamber music — the "Divertimento for String Trio," K. 563, from the pen of Mozart. Divertmenti can sometimes be amusing, deft and attractive to the ear. This one was all of that.

Silverstein, De Pasquale and Mayes lavished their most beautiful tones upon this work and that means one listened to phrases so delicate, so finely spun and so clear that it seemed the epitome of Mozart's art. The audience loved it and so did the listener.

This kind of chamber music program we enjoy, the kind we much prefer to the melodic gyrations of the contemporary brotherhood. We have had too much of it this season. While it's very fine to realize there are musicians who can, will and do play such music, a little can go a long way, even as well as they play.

Next week, for example, we shall have the Kroll Quartet which has held its pinnacle of success for many years and which, if it is sometimes less than inspiring, always has the respect of

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 16 1962

Tanglewood

Chamber Music Performed In Superb Manner

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Why 10,000 clamor for the sounds of a 100-piece orchestra, while a paltry 1,000 clamor when less than 10 musicians perform, has a more subtle solution than can be found in the application of a simple ratio.

One or two exposures to a chamber concert may only suggest that the small group effort is music for limited eggheads, squares or beatnicks. However, to those who had persisted to a little more exposure, as was evident in last night's enthusiastic audience, the symphony orchestra is a good idea but as a steady diet, a dish for the lush.

To most quartet buffs, chamber music can not only run circles around a concerto, it can make a very impressive score on its own. It can create a furious bustle that no orchestra can equal, three strings and a piano can produce more intricate rush and sudden dynamic change than a battery of orchestras, while the comparison of a full orchestra to the intimate clarity of a sonata for flute and piano is ludicrous.

Graffman Magnificent

If last night's Mozart was pure elegance, Prokofiev fresh brilliance, the Brahms Piano Quartet in A major, Op. 26, was uninhibited luxuriance. Garry Graffman's magnificent piano performance proved beyond any doubt that he can play either the big orchestral concerti (he is programmed for the Brahms Concerto, No. 1 with the BSO Sunday) or small chamber works with ease.

He has a remarkable grasp of balance and sensitivity. The pure but vitamin healthy romance of the first movement was played with enough eclat and gallant to waken the tired blood of a beatnick. The dry-eyed performance of the poco adagio was created with a strength that was only equalled by the respect that avoided inflation of moving music beyond logical proportions through immodest delivery. Throughout all, Mr. Graffman performed with finish and control in loud or soft passages despite the awkwardness of the rather formidable piano composition.

The Nova Arte Trio, which performed this work in the Theater-Concert Hall to so discriminating an audience, is composed of Joseph Silverstein, violin; Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes, cello. To make this trio a quartet, Mr. Graffman assisted at the piano. While Messrs. Mayes and de Pasquale are first-chair members of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Silverstein is to be the orchestra's concertmaster in the fall.

The spirit that Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Graffman brought to the music of Prokofiev's Sonata for Flute and Piano, Op. 94, was fresh, pleasing and Prokofian. The pianist produced skillful and dynamic effects and tensions that underscored the good humor and sentiment of the work with but little overscoring to the low tones of the flute.

Mrs. Dwyer Magical

The tone of Mrs. Dwyer's flute which is quite proudly also that of the first flute of the Boston Symphony, is both incredible and magic. The lower register is especially noticable for a clarity that is suggestive of a fine contralto voice or viola. Most of the music of this work had quite a light and effervescent quality that seemed peculiarly akin to a bit of old world charm despite dissonances of modern flavor. One, perhaps, found some difficulty in warming up to the third movement, but where the better writing appeared to drop off, delightful and dulcet sound was still most graciously evident.

Mozart is to many the apogee of chamber music examples. What may be heard in his music through all its subtle intensity, its melancholy and humor, is a marvelous economy of tone. And, despite an orchestra's full throated sound in any symphony, there is very likely to be far more astir and unhampered flight in the powerful, but gossamar thin chamber works of Mozart.

Well Performed

The Divertimento for String Trio, K. 563 so well performed last night, was in itself a fine case in point. How so limited a group can, with such exquisite texture, delight the ear, charm the mind and provoke the heart is, one will humbly confess, unexplainable. Yet Mozart is no more a dim egghead, a dull square or a worn beatnik than is the Department of Agriculture, Venus or Caroline Kennedy.

Should you like to try again next Wednesday, the Kroll Quartet will perform Beethoven and Bartok, and for an early morning sensation there is also a quartet each Sunday at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall. Tonight is the Gala Event!

SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Nova Arte Trio

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola
SAMUEL MAYES, Cello
assisted by
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, Flute
GARY GRAFFMAN, Piano

PROGRAM

BRAHMS — Quartet for Piano and Strings, in A major, Op. 26

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Poco allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro

PROKOFIEV — Sonata for Fute and Piano, Op. 94

I. Andantino
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Andante
IV. Allegro con brio

INTERMISSION

MOZART — Divertimento for String Trio, K. 563

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro
IV. Andante
V. Menuetto. Allegretto
VI. Allegro

Mr. Graffman plays the Steinway Piano.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
AUG 20 1962

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
AUG 26 1962

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 17 1962

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
AUG 20 1962

Tanglewood To Present New Music

Lukas Foss, acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Department of Composition, has arranged a program of recent European and American music to be presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation at Tanglewood (in Lenox), at 3:15 p. m. on Friday. Mr. Foss, in speaking of this concert said, "This is the most advanced program we have ever had at Tanglewood."

Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players, and the program will consist of Evocations by Shapey, Hersch's Quartet, (Morton Feldman's "For Franz Kline", Available Forms No. 2 by Earl Brown, Tropi by Castiglioni, and Geules' Piano Sonata No. 3.

The piece by Earl Brown, Available Forms No. 2, was composed especially for this concert at Tanglewood and will be conducted by the composer. Mr. Brown, Morton Feldman, and Ralph Shapey will each give a short analysis of their works.

Earlier concerts in this new music series have included an all-Stravinskky program, and concerts of new Polish music presented by Witold Lutoslawski and new British music presented by Iain Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Lutoslawski are guest composers in residence at Tanglewood this summer.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 16 1962

MUSIC LIFTED TO HEIGHTS AT TANGLEWOOD

Nova Arte Trio Plays Great String Works in Grand Manner

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Great music for strings played in the grand manner was offered by the Nova Arte Trio at the weekly chamber music concert in the Theater at Tanglewood Wednesday night.

Virtuosi of BSO

Participants were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Joseph De Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes, cello, assisted by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Gary Graffman, piano. All are virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, except pianist Graffman, who on Sunday afternoon will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This was an evening in which everyone had a good time or should have had a good time, for one listened to perfectly balanced performances and a meticulous musicianship which lifted the music to its very heights. There was no pounding, yet every point was made clear. It was one for all and all for one.

The opening number was the Brahms "Quartet for Piano and Strings in A Major," Op. 26, a work in which this master melodist was at his finest. Tune after tune flowed its melodious way without pause. Never for a moment was the melodic line allowed to lie dormant. It was perfectly evident that the performers were having as good a time as the listeners. They seemed almost introspective as they wound their way through the music. An introspection in public performance is not too often found. Therefore we had a feeling that this music came to us from the inside.

Perfect Balance

Graffman is a chamber pianist par excellence. He maintains a perfect balance and is always in the mood. He can also color his tone to match any in the ensemble. The other members of the quartet are old hands at this sort of music and they brought to it their prodigious musicianship and long experience, giving freely of their knowledge so that the Brahms of today might be as great as the Brahms of yesterday. He was.

Tanglewood audiences have always had their favorites among the soloists who appear before them. It would be a gross understatement, if one should say Mrs. Dwyer was less than the favorite of all the festivals I have attended. Young, vastly attractive, modest and a musician to her dainty fingertips, she has about everything that an audience would want and she gives of her wares in abundance but not with abandon, for her musicianship is impeccable and her feeling for the music she plays very profound.

She offered, with the expert assistance of Graffman, a performance of the Prokofiev "Sonata for Flute and Piano," Op. 94. This is a joyous piece, loaded with intriguing dance rhythms and Russian tunes. Graffman maintained his usual discreet and sensitive collaboration and the result was both joyous to the ear and pretty good for the soul. Anyway, the audience seemed to like it for there were bravos all over the hall.

From the piquant beauties of Prokofiev we turned to one of the great masterpieces in chamber music — the "Divertimento for String Trio," K. 563, from the pen of Mozart. Divertment can sometimes be amusing, deft and attractive to the ear. This one was all of that.

Silverstein, De Pasquale and Mayes lavished their most beautiful tones upon this work and that means one listened to phrases so delicate, so finely spun and so clear that it seemed the epitome of Mozart's art. The audience loved it and so did the listener.

This kind of chamber music program we enjoy, the kind we much prefer to the melodic gyrations of the contemporary brotherhood. We have had too much of it this season. While it's very fine to realize there are musicians who can, will and do play such music, a little can go a long way, even as well as they play.

Next week, for example, we shall have the Kroll Quartet which has held its pinnacle of success for many years and which, if it is sometimes less than inspiring, always has the

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 16 1962

Tanglewood

Chamber Music Performed In Superb Manner

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Why 10,000 clamor for the sounds of a 100-piece orchestra, while a paltry 1,000 clamor when less than 10 musicians perform, has a more subtle solution than can be found in the application of a simple ratio.

One or two exposures to a chamber concert may only suggest that the small group effort is music for limited eggheads, squares or beatnicks. However, to those who had persisted to a little more exposure, as was evident in last night's enthusiastic audience, the symphony orchestra is a good idea but as a steady diet, a dish for the lush.

To most quartet buffs, chamber music can not only run circles around a concerto, it can make a very impressive score on its own. It can create a furious bustle that no orchestra can equal, three strings and a piano can produce more intricate rush and sudden dynamic change than a battery of orchestras, while the comparison of a full orchestra to the intimate clarity of a sonata for flute and piano is ludicrous.

Graffman Magnificent

If last night's Mozart was pure elegance, Prokofiev fresh brilliance, the Brahms Piano Quartet in A major, Op. 26, was unInhibited luxuriance. Garry Graffman's magnificent piano performance proved beyond any doubt that he can play either the big orchestral concerti (he is programmed for the Brahms Concerto, No. 1 with the BSO Sunday) or small chamber works with ease.

He has a remarkable grasp of balance and sensitivity. The pure but vitamin healthy romance of the first movement was played with enough eclat and gallant to waken the tired blood of a beatnick. The dry-eyed performance of the poco adagio was created with a strength that was only equalled by the respect that avoided inflation of moving music beyond logical proportions through immodest delivery. Throughout all, Mr. Graffman performed with finish and control in loud or soft passages despite the awkwardness of the rather formidable piano composition.

The Nova Arte Trio, which performed this work in the Theater-Concert Hall to so discriminating an audience, is composed of Joseph Silverstein, violin; Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes, cello. To make this trio a quartet, Mr. Graffman assisted at the piano. While Messrs. Mayes and de Pasquale are first-chair members of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Silverstein is to be the orchestra's concertmaster in the fall.

The spirit that Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Graffman brought to the music of Prokofiev's Sonata for Flute and Piano, Op. 94, was fresh, pleasing and Prokofian. The pianist produced skillful and dynamic effects and tensions that underscored the good humor and sentiment of the work with but little overscoring to the low tones of the flute.

Mrs. Dwyer Magical

The tone of Mrs. Dwyer's flute which is quite proudly also that of the first flute of the Boston Symphony, is both incredible and magic. The lower register is especially noticable for a clarity that is suggestive of a fine contralto voice or viola. Most of the music of this work had quite a light and effervescent quality that seemed peculiarly akin to a bit of old world charm despite dissonances of modern flavor. One, perhaps, found some difficulty in warming up to the third movement, but where the better writing appeared to drop off, delightful and dulcet sound was still most graciously evident.

Mozart is to many the apogee of chamber music examples. What may be heard in his music through all its subtle intensity, its melancholy and humor, is a marvelous economy of tone. And, despite an orchestra's full throated sound in any symphony, there is very likely to be far more astir and unhampered flight in the powerful, but gossamer thin chamber works of Mozart.

Well Performed

The Divertimento for String Trio, K. 563 so well performed last night, was in itself a fine case in point. How so limited a group can, with such exquisite texture, delight the ear, charm the mind and provoke the heart is, one will humbly confess, unexplainable. Yet Mozart is no more a dim egghead, a dull square or a worn beatnik than is the Department of Agriculture, Venus or Caroline Kennedy.

Should you like to try again next Wednesday, the Kroll Quartet will perform Beethoven and Bartók, and for an early morning sensation there is also a quartet each Sunday at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall. Tonight is the Gala Event!

167 P5

168

EIGHTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Kroll Quartet

WILLIAM KROLL, Violin
WILLIAM STONE, Violin
HARRY ZARATZIAN, Viola
AVRON TWERDOWSKY, Cello

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN — String Quartet in F major, Op. 18, No. 1

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio affettuoso ed appassionato
III. Scherzo: Allegro molto
IV. Allegro

BARTOK — String Quartet No. 2, Op. 17

I. Moderato
II. Allegro molto capriccioso
III. Lento

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN — Quartet in A minor, Op. 132

I. Assai sostenuto; Allegro
II. Allegro ma non tanto
III. Molto adagio: Canzona di ringraziamento, in modo lidico, offerta alla divinitá da un guarito
IV. Alla marcia, assai vivace; Allegro appassionato

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 23 1962

Music Review

The Kroll Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE KROLL Quartet program in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was the final concert of the season's chamber music series, and proved to be as perfected and distinguished an evening as may be available in current ensemble playing.

The ease and elegance of their performance were surface manifestations of the most thorough and intimate comprehension of their program, one from the beginning and one from the end of Beethoven's quartet writings, and the second Bartok.

The members of the quartet, William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, Avron Twerdowsky, cello, played with the flexible authority which genuine confidence warrants and which their individual instrumental prowess permits.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN F major, opus 18, No. 1, is engaging music, without any pretense of deep introspection which his last quartets entail. Between this first published of the early six and the A minor, his opus 132, was as vast a distance as musical thought of his era could brook, vaster probably, as many of that time thought Beethoven was venturing into the infinity of musical dimensions. Yet in the Krolls' architecture the parts fitted with perfect and skillful accuracy, to the last detail, and patently required no greater concentration than the more simple demands of the earlier work.

The Krolls made the "thanks to the Divinity for a recovery" a sublime gem. Beethoven's intent was obviously so lofty that he could not express it in an excess of fervor, so he turned to a humble penitence which only understatement could convey. The Krolls achieved an organ-like tonal quality with a studied minimum of vibrato, an absolutely immaculate execution and a selfless immersion in music of such paramount inspiration. Rarely can an audience have an opportunity to hear the intricacies of this era of Beethoven's quartets exposed so masterfully and played so beautifully, a goal arrived at by years of application to a process of endless refining.

BARTOK'S quartets occupy very nearly the analogous importance in his life as did Beethoven's quartets to him. He allowed years to elapse after completing one before he delved again into the medium. This, his second, dates from nearly 50 years ago, but its harmonic structure is as advanced as this reviewer can assimilate.

Whether Bartok persisted in his linear obstinacy without regard for the relationship that would develop in the other voices or whether he "heard" those intervals and deliberately juxtaposed them is a factor of which we do not have the solution. But under the nonchalant agreement which the Krolls maintained with the composer the audience could not have had any doubt as to their validity. Indeed, there was almost a basis to regard this as a continuation of the late Beethovens.

There are three movements to this Bartok: The first has several changes of vigorous mood; the second, an abandoned dance rhythm and the last, a deeply pensive poem. The Krolls not only made them transparent, but did so with the utmost sensitivity. Someone else may have counted the number of their recalls.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 23 1962

Concert Review

Weekly Chamber Concerts Ended By Kroll Quartet

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Chamber Concerts of the regular Wednesday evening series were concluded last night with a program bracketing Beethoven and Bartok quartets, played by the Kroll Quartet in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

William Kroll, who is a faculty member of long standing at the Berkshire Music Center, is also founder and first violinist of this group which includes William Stone, violin; Harry Zaratzian, viola and Avron Twerdowsky, cello. The four performed, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, three works by the two giants of quartet, the somewhat stern Opus 18, No. 1 and melancholy Opus 132 by Beethoven, spaced by the early, mystical Bartok Quartet No. 2.

Fine Skill

While the at first rather dull and almost irascible little tune that opens the allegro con brio of the first movement becomes less assertive in clever molding by the instruments, its hard, brittle turn-like motifs, after being pitched and tossed from one instrument to another (102 times in 313 bars), becomes for the listener somewhat more a matter of fine skill than enduring attraction. However, the adagio of this same work, written when Beethoven at 28 first experienced deafness and bachelorhood growing over him, was, as displayed by the Kroll Quartet, the work of an artist who could masterfully imbue melancholy with an uncloying but magnificent beauty.

Though Beethoven's quartets are made marvelous by dint of the tradition set by his predecessors Mozart and Haydn, they are made great by the breaking and remaking of his own traditions. No less can be said, however, of Bela Bartok whose Quartet No. 2 not only breaks and set tradition, but takes as well a magnificent stride by employing the new exotic eastern Maygar folk tunes into highly formalized western music form. While this is a more introspective quartet, as measured by his others, he can and does as in the second movement, allegro molto capriccioso pick up his feet in a most exciting manner.

These highlights of the evening with their bright, stringent rhythms were played with more skill than any other portion. The first cantabile and third lento movements linked by similar themes were not only a study in mild dissonance, but a study in impressionism at its bleakest melancholy.

Unfettered by Restraints

While perhaps Opus 18 is a reflection of environmental and learning circumstances of Beethoven's earlier life, Quartet 132 is a product of his own intrinsic art. Here his powerful imagination is unfettered by restraints of any tradition, reticence or caution. He expresses in leaps of wild excitement, bold modulations and brusk contrasts; both happiness and somber sadness.

Despite Beethoven's now troubled life of aged loneliness, poverty, sickness, heavy deafness and dimming sight; despite the eerie mood of the first and third movements, close resemblance to last night's chilly darkness, fog and the to-and-fro flights of a nervous bat in the hall; despite the despairing beauty of the adagio. Beethoven shakes off this morbidity in the second and fourth movement with a marvelous impropriety of calm joy and with that creates the soul of his great art.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Last Concert By Students Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD—The final concert by the students of the Berkshire Music Center will be held Sunday morning at 10 in the theater concert hall. In celebration of his 80th birthday, the chamber music program will be devoted to the music of Stravinsky. It will be the last event of the 1962 Festival season open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program will open with Stravinsky's Duo with violinist Hiroko Abe, of Tokyo, Japan, and Carol Jean Rand of East Grand Forks, Minn., pianist, as the performers. They have been coached by Ruth Posselt.

Joseph Silverstein, who will become concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in October, has prepared a Stravinsky septet. The players in this work include Robert Wingert of Mansfield, Ohio, clarinet; Ryohei Nakagawa of Tokyo, bassoon; Mary Ann Stephens of Covington, Ky., French horn; Barbara Heinen of Verona, Miss., violin; Frank Reilly of Boston, viola; Raphael Sommer of Israel, cello; and Martine Joste of Paris, France, piano.

The concert will close with Stravinsky's octet, which has been prepared by Louis Speyer, English horn player of the BSO. Instrumentalists in this work will be Susan Cohn of Hollywood, Calif., flute; Craig Watjen of Pawtucket, R.I., clarinet; David Carroll of Tonawanda, N.Y., bassoon; Karl Porter of Baltimore, Md., bassoon; Carlton Whelchel of Watertown, trumpet; Brian Coogan of Melbourne, Australia, trumpet; Phillip Jameson of Wooster, Ohio, trombone; and Andre Smith of Baltimore, trombone.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059
JUL 1962

CHAMBER MUSIC The Berkshi... is featuring th...

...discovery to ... Arts Quartet, the Arts Trio of New York, BMC Chamber ... the Nova Arts Trio and the Kroll Quartet ... The Vancouver Festival has the Juilliard Quartet . . . The Fine Arts Quartet will perform at the Aspen Music Festival . . . A "Starlight Festival" of chamber music is being presented on the Yale campus in New Haven this summer, the dates, June 26, July 10, July 24 and August 7. Artists featured are Bruce Simonds (piano), Willie Ruff (French horn), Albert Fuller (harpsichord), and Robert Helps (composer-pianist). The Quartet, headed by violinist Scheir, includes Ann Barak, violin; Julian Barber, viola; and a new cellist this season, Aaron Shapinsky.

T68

EIGHTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Kroll Quartet

WILLIAM KROLL, Violin
WILLIAM STONE, Violin
HARRY ZARATZIAN, Viola
AVRON TWERDOWSKY, Cello

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN — String Quartet in F major, Op. 18, No. 1

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio affettuoso ed appassionato
III. Scherzo: Allegro molto
IV. Allegro

BARTOK — String Quartet No. 2, Op. 17

I. Moderato
II. Allegro molto capriccioso
III. Lento

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN — Quartet in A minor, Op. 132

I. Assai sostenuto; Allegro
II. Allegro ma non tanto
III. Molto adagio: Canzona di ringraziamento, in modo lidico, offerta alla divinità da un guarito
IV. Alla marcia, assai vivace; Allegro appassionato

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 23 1962

Music Review

The Kroll Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE KROLL Quartet program in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was the final concert of the season's chamber music series, and proved to be as perfected and distinguished an evening as may be available in current ensemble playing.

The ease and elegance of their performance were surface manifestations of the most thorough and intimate comprehension of their program, one from the beginning and one from the end of Beethoven's quartet writings, and the second Bartok.

The members of the quartet, William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, Avron Twerdowsky, cello, played with the flexible authority which genuine confidence warrants and which their individual instrumental prowess permits.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN F major, opus 18, No. 1, is engaging music, without any pretense of deep introspection which his last quartets entail. Between this first published of the early six and the A minor, his opus 132, was as vast a distance as musical thought of his era could brook, vaster probably, as many of that time thought Beethoven was venturing into the infinity of musical dimensions. Yet in the Krolls' architecture the parts fitted with perfect and skillful accuracy, to the last detail, and patently required no greater concentration than the more simple demands of the earlier work.

The Krolls made the "thanks to the Divinity for a recovery" a sublime gem. Beethoven's intent was obviously so lofty that he could not express it in an excess of fervor, so he turned to a humble penitence which only understatement could convey. The Krolls achieved an organ-like tonal quality with a studied minimum of vibrato, an absolutely immaculate execution and a selfless immersion in music of such paramount inspiration. Rarely can an audience have an opportunity to hear the intricacies of this era of Beethoven's quartets exposed so masterfully and played so beautifully, a goal arrived at by years of application to a process of endless refining.

BARTOK'S quartets occupy very nearly the analogous importance in his life as did Beethoven's quartets to him. He allowed years to elapse after completing one before he delved again into the medium. This, his second, dates from nearly 50 years ago, but its harmonic structure is as advanced as this reviewer can assimilate.

Whether Bartok persisted in his linear obstinacy without regard for the relationship that would develop in the other voices or whether he "heard" those intervals and deliberately juxtaposed them is a factor of which we do not have the solution. But under the nonchalant agreement which the Krolls maintained with the composer the audience could not have had any doubt as to their validity. Indeed, there was almost a basis to regard this as a continuation of the late Beethovens.

There are three movements to this Bartok: The first has several changes of vigorous mood; the second, an abandoned dance rhythm and the last, a deeply pensive poem. The Krolls not only made them transparent, but did so with the utmost sensitivity. Someone else may have counted the number of their recalls.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 23 1962

Concert Review

Weekly Chamber Concerts Ended By Kroll Quartet

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Chamber Concerts of the regular Wednesday evening series were concluded last night with a program bracketing Beethoven and Bartok quartets, played by the Kroll Quartet in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

William Kroll, who is a faculty member of long standing at the Berkshire Music Center, is also founder and first violinist of this group which includes William Stone, violin; Harry Zaratzian, viola and Avron Twerdowsky, cello. The four performed, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, three works by the two giants of quartet, the somewhat stern Opus 18, No. 1 and melancholy Opus 132 by Beethoven, spaced by the early, mystical Bartok Quartet No. 2.

Fine Skill

While the at first rather dull and almost irascible little tune that opens the allegro con brio of the first movement becomes less assertive in clever molding by the instruments, its hard, brittle turn-like motifs, after being pitched and tossed from one instrument to another (102 times in 313 bars), becomes for the listener somewhat more a matter of fine skill than enduring attraction. However, the adagio of this same work, written when Beethoven at 28 first experienced deafness and bachelorhood grow ing over him, was as displayed by the Kroll Quartet, the work of an artist who could masterfully imbue melancholy with an uncloying but magnificent beauty.

Though Beethoven's quartets are made marvelous by dint of the tradition set by his predecessors Mozart and Haydn, they are made great by the breaking and remaking of his own traditions. No less can be said, however, of Bela Bartok whose Quartet No. not only breaks and set tradition, but takes as well a magnificent stride by employing the new exotic eastern Maygar folk tunes into highly formalized western music form. While this is a more introspective quartet, as measured by his others, he can and does as in the second movement, allegro molto capriccioso pick up his feet in a most exciting manner.

These highlights of the evening with their bright, stringent rhythms were played with more skill than any other portion. The first cantabile and third lento movements linked by similar themes were not only a study in mild dissonance, but a study in impressionism at its bleakest melancholy.

Unfettered by Restraints

While perhaps Opus 18 is a reflection of environmental and learning circumstances of Beethoven's earlier life, Quartet 13 is a product of his own intrinsic art. Here his powerful imagination is unfettered by restraints of any tradition, reticence or caution. He expresses in leaps of wild excitement, bold modulations and brusk contrasts, both happiness and somber sadness.

Despite Beethoven's now troubled life of aged loneliness, poverty, sickness, heavy deafness and dimming sight; despite the eerie mood of the first and third movements, close resemblance to last night's chilly darkness, fog and the to-and-fro flights of a nervous bat in the hall; despite the despairing beauty of the adagio. Beethoven shakes off this morbidity in the second and fourth movement with a marvelous impropriety of calm joy and with that creates the soul of his great art.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 23 1962

Last Concert By Students Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD—The final concert by the students of the Berkshire Music Center will be held Sunday morning at 10 in the theater concert hall. In celebration of his 80th birthday, the chamber music program will be devoted to the music of Stravinsky. It will be the last event of the 1962 Festival season open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program will open with Stravinsky's Duo with violinist Hiroko Abe, of Tokyo, Japan, and Carol Jean Rand of East Grand Forks, Minn., pianist, as the performers. They have been coached by Ruth Posselt.

Joseph Silverstein, who will become concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in October, has prepared a Stravinsky septet. The players in this work include Robert Wingert of Mansfield, Ohio, clarinet; Byohei Nakagawa of Tokyo, bassoon; Mary Ann Stephens of Covington, Ky., French horn; Barbara Heinen of Verona, Miss., violin; Frank Reilly of Boston, viola; Raphael Sommer of Israel, cello; and Martine Joste of Paris, France, piano.

The concert will close with Stravinsky's octet, which has been prepared by Louis Speyer, English horn player of the BSO. Instrumentalists in this work will be Susan Cohn of Hollywood, Calif., flute; Craig Watjen of Pawtucket, R.I., clarinet; David Carroll of Tonawanda, N.Y., bassoon; Karl Porter of Baltimore, Md., bassoon; Carlton Whelchel of Watertown, trumpet; Brian Coogan of Melbourne, Australia, trumpet; Phillip Jameson of Wooster, Ohio, trombone; and Andre Smith of Baltimore, trombone.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059
JUL 1962

CHAMBER MUSIC The Berkshire Festival is featuring the Fine Arts Quartet, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, BMC Chamber Music, the Nova Scotia Trio and the Kroll Quartet . . . The Vancouver Festival has the Juilliard Quartet . . . The Fine Arts Quartet will perform at the Aspen Music Festival . . . A "Starlight Festival" of chamber music is being presented on the Yale campus in New Haven this summer, the dates, June 26, July 10, July 24 and August 7. Artists featured are Bruce Simonds (piano), Willie Ruff (French horn), Albert Fuller (harpsichord), and Robert Helps (composer-pianist). The Quartet, headed by violinist Scheir, includes Ann Barak, violin; Julian Barber, viola; and a new cellist this season, Aaron Shapinsky.

BLANK PAGE

170 TANGLEWOOD POPS. AUG 2ND 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 4 1962

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

THE WORD "POPS" in itself has an unmusical sound, but when the name Arthur Fiedler is joined with it the word becomes a proper noun synonymous with music. What is the genesis of the proper "Pops" which has come to mean music to so many millions?

Strangely enough, the proper Bostonians coined the term. In 1885 Wilhelm Gericke, then conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conceived the idea of a series of concerts to keep the Boston Symphony musicians well honed during their inactive summer months. The series was to be called "Promenade Concerts" after a similar series in London in which the audience strolled about while listening to the orchestra. The Boston concerts became a popular way of spending a spring evening, but proper Bostonians of the day could not accept the name "Promenade Concerts," and they soon termed them "Popular Concerts." With the typical American quirk for shortening names, "Pops Concerts" evolved in no time.

Arthur Fiedler in his thirty-two years as conductor of the Boston Pops has created music which has a magical manner of attracting audiences, and the word "Pops" has become synonymous with light and gay music. Last week we once again welcomed Mr. Fiedler to Tanglewood for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood program.

* * *

I HAVE OFTEN heard questions about the Pops Orchestra asked during the Tanglewood season. "When does the Pops Orchestra come?" "What do they do during the rest of the summer?" "Does Arthur Fiedler travel with the Pops Orchestra all the time?" The answers to the first two are quite simple. When it becomes Pops time in Boston or at Tanglewood, the men of the Boston Symphony engage in what might be described as musical chairs. Alfred Krips moves one chair to his right, from that of assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony to concertmaster of the Boston Pops. And so it goes throughout the whole orchestra. In essence, then, the Boston Pops is the Boston Symphony without the first desk players, and wherever the Boston Symphony is located, there is the Boston Pops.

To the third question concerning Fiedler's travels the answer is not as easy. No, he doesn't always travel with the Boston Pops, but he makes Pops music with other orchestras throughout the year. For example, following the Pops season in Boston Mr. Fiedler traveled to San Francisco, Miami, Tanglewood, and now he is back in San Francisco. In the winter he organizes the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra which brings the old "Popular Concerts" to many areas of the United States.

* * *

I AM OFTEN asked the question, "Why don't you have Tanglewood - on - Parade anymore?" Tanglewood - on - Parade was originally designed to parade the talent of the Berkshire Music Center student body toward the end of each session of the Music Center. A portion of the evening program was shared by the student orchestra and the Boston Pops and was a benefit for the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Audiences at the student events at Tanglewood increased considerably through the years, and at the same time there was a demand for a lengthening of the Pops program.

* * *

TO SATISFY THESE demands we now set aside two evenings for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. One — the Boston Pops at Tanglewood — which took place last Thursday; the other — the forthcoming August 23 Gala Evening — which will be devoted solely to performances by the students of the Berkshire Music Center. Tanglewood - on - Parade, a good name, has given way to progress.

In writing Tanglewood Topics this week, it occurred to me that there are many questions which readers might have concerning the activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home. As close as I am to Tanglewood, I am perhaps too apt to take things for granted; things about which visitors to this area might wish to know more. Therefore, as time and space allow I shall be pleased to respond to any suitable queries which you might have. Please address them to: Editor, Berkshire Week, Berkshire Eagle, Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

Whitestone

Arthur Fiedler rehearsing Boston Pops Orchestra at Tanglewood.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717
AUG 2 1962

Beer on Menu

Pops Orchestra With Fiedler In BMC Benefit Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — One of the biggest crowds of the Berkshire Festival season is expected here tonight for the performance of the Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

The weather bureau promises warm weather and clear skies for the annual event, which this year will take on the appearance of an Esplanade concert in Boston with Dutch beer on the menu. All proceeds from the sale of the Dutch beer called Amstel will be turned over by the brewing company to the Music Center.

A few reserved seats remain for the Music Shed, and the sale of grounds admissions has been brisk today, Tanglewood officials report.

The grounds will open at 6 and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Mr. Fiedler arrived in the Berkshires Tuesday from Miami, Fla., where he visited his wife and two children, and conducted one concert there after a flight from San Francisco where he has been conducting for several weeks. He will return to San Francisco following his engagement here. While in the Berkshires, Mr. Fiedler is the house guest of Mrs. Charles Whipple in Lenox.

Wild Soloist

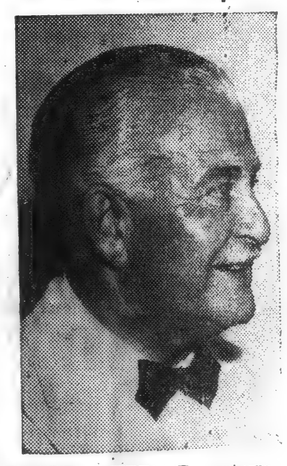
Earl Wild, who will appear as piano soloist with the Boston Pops tonight in a performance of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, arrived from New York last night for the concert and is registered at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

Allan Kayes, representative of Red Seal records for RCA, also arrived here today for conferences with Mr. Fiedler and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Color photographs will be taken at Tanglewood tomorrow, by RCA photographers, of Mr. Fiedler in the Tanglewood setting for use on the jacket of Red Seal records to be distributed next year.

Mr. Fiedler will open tonight's program in the Shed at 8 with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever." The concert will also include the suite from "El Çid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, waltzes, "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story," by Leonard Bernstein.

CAPITAL NEWS BUREAU
N. Y.

Conductor of "Pops"



ARTHUR FIEDLER returns to Tanglewood on Thursday, August 2 (at 8:00 P. M.) for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 29 1962

Music

'Call of Wild' From Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops apparently feel repetition is the spice of "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual concert for the benefit of Berkshire Music Center. It will be given Thursday at 8 p.m.

For the fourth successive summer, Earl Wild will be piano soloist, playing Gershwin's Concerto in F, which he performed at Tanglewood in 1959 and 1960. Last summer he played Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto.

Other repeats are Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" (the program's welcomed trademark) and selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story," heard last summer.

In an effort not to "stalemate" the program, Fiedler is including Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 2 1962

Beer on Menu

Pops Orchestra WithFiedler In BMC Benefit Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — One of the biggest crowds of the Berkshire Festival season is expected here tonight for the performance of the Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

The weather bureau promises warm weather and clear skies for the annual event, which this year will take on the appearance of an Esplanade concert in Boston with Dutch beer on the menu. All proceeds from the sale of the Dutch beer called Amstel will be turned over by the brewing company to the Music Center.

A few reserved seats remain for the Music Shed, and the sale of grounds admissions has been brisk today, Tanglewood officials report.

The grounds will open at 6 and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Mr. Fiedler arrived in the Berkshires Tuesday from Miami, Fla., where he visited his wife and two children, and conducted one concert there after a flight from San Francisco where he has been conducting for several weeks. He will return to San Francisco following his engagement here. While in the Berkshires, Mr. Fiedler is the house guest of Mrs. Charles Whipple in Lenox.

Wild Soloist

Earl Wild, who will appear as piano soloist with the Boston Pops tonight in a performance of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, arrived from New York last night for the concert and is registered at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

Allan Kayes, representative of Red Seal records for RCA, also arrived here today for conferences with Mr. Fiedler and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Color photographs will be taken at Tanglewood tomorrow, by RCA photographers, of Mr. Fiedler in the Tanglewood setting for use on the jacket of Red Seal records to be distributed next year.

Mr. Fiedler will open tonight's program in the Shed at 8 with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever." The concert will also include the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, waltzes, "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story," by Leonard Bernstein.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 29 1962

Pops Concert Thursday Is High Point of Season

Tanglewood Event With Arthur Fielder Conducting Is Music Center Benefit

Special to The Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS— One of the country's most popular events of the summer season, the concert by the Boston Pops, will take place Thursday night at Tanglewood. The concert is for benefit of Berkshire Music Center, the summer school sponsored by Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert will feature Earl Wild, pianist, playing the Concerto in F, for piano and orchestra, by George Gershwin. Conducting the well-known orchestra will be Arthur Fiedler. The program will be held in the Music Shed, and will begin at 8.

Tickets went on sale Friday of last week as the entire Music Shed will be reserved for the night. Those wishing to hear the program from Tanglewood lawns may be able to purchase tickets Thursday, beginning at noon. The gates to the grounds will be open at 6 p. m.

Starting off the program will be the well-known rendition by the orchestra of John Philip Sousa's famous "Stars and Stripes Forever." The remainder of the program will include the Suite from "El Cid" by Massenet; Josef Strauss' "Mein Lehenslauf ist Lieb und Lust;" "Pine of Rome," by Respighi, and also selections from "The West Side Story," Leonard Bernstein.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JUL 14 1962

A TANGLEWOOD TRIBUTE once a year during the Summer festival of concerts is the benefit which helps to support the many-sided work of the Berkshire Music Center. Thursday, Aug. 2, is the date for the special concert which Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will offer. Program favorites will include Sousa's "Stars and Stripes," and selections by Massenet, Strauss, Respighi and Bernstein. Gates to the Tanglewood lawns around the music shed will be opened at six for picnickers before the eight o'clock concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 12,916
AUG 1 1962

As You Like It

By JUDITH AHEARN

The Boston Pops Orchestra will present the annual Boston Pops Benefit tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the performance, which will open with John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

The program will feature Earl Wild as soloist in George Gershwin's "Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra."

Other works will be the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust" by Josef Strauss, various waltzes and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra will also play selections from "West Side Story."

Proceeds from the performance will go to the Berkshire Music Center.

The grounds at Tanglewood will open tomorrow at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers, or buy box suppers at the cafeteria.

All seats in the shed are reserved, and tickets for the lawns will go on sale at noon tomorrow.

This week is a good one at Tanglewood.

Tonight at 8 o'clock the New York Chamber Soloists will perform in the theater under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation.

Friday at 3:15 p.m. there will be a lecture on the materials of music by Iain Hamilton, composer in residence at the music center.

Friday night at 8 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Saint Saens' "Violoncello Concerto No. 1 in A Minor," with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, as soloist.

Saturday at 10 o'clock in the morning there will be an open rehearsal for the benefit of the symphony's pension fund. William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will be guest conductor at the performance at 8 p.m.

Sunday, Rudolf Serkin will be soloist with Charles Munch and the symphony at 2:30 in a performance of Beethoven's Emperor Concerto.

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
JOURNAL
W. 3,132
JUL 19 1962

BOSTON POPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Reserved tickets for a benefit concert to be played by the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on Thursday August 2 go on sale at the Berkshire Festival Box Office in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow, July 20. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available on the day of the concert beginning at noon. The gates will be opened at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them.

Arthur Fiedler, director of the famous Pops orchestra, has announced that this season's annual concert by the orchestra for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will feature Pianist Earl Wild playing the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, by George Gershwin.

The concert will open at 8 p.m., in the Music Shed with the Boston Pops' famous rendition of Sousa's The Stars and Stripes Forever. Other numbers on the program are the Suite from Massenet's El Cid, a Josef Strauss waltz, Respighi's Pines of Rome, and selections from Leonard Bernstein's West Side Story.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 2 1962

Beer on Menu

Pops Orchestra With Fiedler In BMC Benefit Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — One of the biggest crowds of the Berkshire Festival season is expected here tonight for the performance of the Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

The weather bureau promises warm weather and clear skies for the annual event, which this year will take on the appearance of an Esplanade concert in Boston with Dutch beer on the menu. All proceeds from the sale of the Dutch beer called Amstel will be turned over by the brewing company to the Music Center.

A few reserved seats remain for the Music Shed, and the sale of grounds admissions has been brisk today, Tanglewood officials report.

The grounds will open at 6 and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Mr. Fiedler arrived in the Berkshires Tuesday from Miami, Fla., where he visited his wife and two children, and conducted one concert there after a flight from San Francisco where he has been conducting for several weeks. He will return to San Francisco following his engagement here. While in the Berkshires, Mr. Fiedler is the house guest of Mrs. Charles Whipple in Lenox.

Wild Soloist

Earl Wild, who will appear as piano soloist with the Boston Pops tonight in a performance of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, arrived from New York last night for the concert and is registered at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

Allan Kayes, representative of Red Seal records for RCA, also arrived here today for conferences with Mr. Fiedler and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Color photographs will be taken at Tanglewood tomorrow, by RCA photographers, of Mr. Fiedler in the Tanglewood setting for use on the jacket of Red Seal records to be distributed next year.

Mr. Fiedler will open tonight's program in the Shed at 8 with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever." The concert will also include the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, waltzes, "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story," by Leonard Bernstein.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 29 1962

Pops Concert Thursday Is High Point of Season

Tanglewood Event With Arthur Fielder Conducting Is Music Center Benefit

Special to The Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS— One of the country's most popular events of the summer season, the concert by the Boston Pops, will take place Thursday night at Tanglewood. The concert is for benefit of Berkshire Music Center, the summer school sponsored by Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert will feature Earl Wild, pianist, playing the Concerto in F, for piano and orchestra, by George Gershwin. Conducting the well-known orchestra will be Arthur Fiedler. The program will be held in the Music Shed, and will begin at 8.

Tickets went on sale Friday of last week as the entire Music Shed will be reserved for the night. Those wishing to hear the program from Tanglewood lawns may be able to purchase tickets Thursday, beginning at noon. The gates to the grounds will be open at 6 p. m.

Starting off the program will be the well-known rendition by the orchestra of John Philip Sousa's famous "Stars and Stripes Forever." The remainder of the program will include the Suite from "El Cid" by Massenet; Josef Strauss' "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb und Lust;" "Pine of Rome," by Respighi, and also selections from "The West Side Story," Leonard Bernstein.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JUL 14 1962

A TANGLEWOOD TRIBUTE once a year during the Summer festival of concerts is the benefit which helps to support the many-sided work of the Berkshire Music Center. Thursday, Aug. 2, is the date for the special concert which Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will offer. Program favorites will include Sousa's "Stars and Stripes," and selections by Massenet, Strauss, Respighi and Bernstein. Gates to the Tanglewood lawns around the music shed will be opened at six for picnickers before the eight o'clock concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 12,916
AUG 1 1962

As You Like It

By JUDITH AHEARN

The Boston Pops Orchestra will present the annual Boston Pops Benefit tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the performance, which will open with John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

The program will feature Earl Wild as soloist in George Gershwin's "Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra."

Other works will be the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust" by Josef Strauss, various waltzes and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra will also play selections from "West Side Story."

Proceeds from the performance will go to the Berkshire Music Center.

The grounds at Tanglewood will open tomorrow at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers, or buy box suppers at the cafeteria.

All seats in the shed are reserved, and tickets for the lawns will go on sale at noon tomorrow.

This week is a good one at Tanglewood.

Tonight at 8 o'clock the New York Chamber Soloists will perform in the theater under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation.

Friday at 3:15 p.m. there will be a lecture on the materials of music by Iain Hamilton, composer in residence at the music center.

Friday night at 8 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Saint Saens' "Violoncello Concerto No. 1 in A Minor," with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, as soloist.

Saturday at 10 o'clock in the morning there will be an open rehearsal for the benefit of the symphony's pension fund. William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will be guest conductor at the performance at 2 p.m.

Sunday, Rudolf Serkin will be soloist with Charles Munch and the symphony at 2:30 in a performance of Beethoven's Emperor Concerto.

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
JOURNAL
W. 3,132
JUL 19 1962

BOSTON POPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Reserved tickets for a benefit concert to be played by the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on Thursday August 2 go on sale at the Berkshire Festival Box Office in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow, July 20. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available on the day of the concert beginning at noon. The gates will be opened at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them.

Arthur Fiedler, director of the famous Pops orchestra, has announced that this season's annual concert by the orchestra for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will feature Pianist Earl Wild playing the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, by George Gershwin.

The concert will open at 8 p.m., in the Music Shed with the Boston Pops' famous rendition of Sousa's The Stars and Stripes Forever. Other numbers on the program are the Suite from Massenet's El Cid, a Josef Strauss waltz, Respighi's Pines of Rome, and selections from Leonard Bernstein's West Side Story.

172

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 3 1962

PICNIC GROUPS dotted the Tanglewood lawn before last night's performance by the Boston Pops Orchestra. Mr. and Mrs. A. Eugene Schubert of 892 West St., Mr. and Mrs. John T. Castles of 18 Willow Lane and Miss Deborah Schubert are joined by Leonard Atherton of London, England, a student this summer at Tanglewood.

Photos by Mitchell

CANTEEN AREA catered to a continuous crowd of picnickers before annual event. The concert was for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood Pops Concert

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 18 1962

POPS CONDUCTOR Arthur Fiedler takes a bow between numbers during concert. In addition to scheduled program, four encores were played by the orchestra.

SPREADING BLANKETS on the lawn at Tanglewood, a group of music lovers prepares to establish themselves for a picnic before listening to Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

By William Tague

CAPITAL CITY
ALBAN
NEWS
CLIPP COMPLETE STATE
RAVENA NEWS
CAPITAL CITY
ALBAN
NEWS
CLIPP COMPLETE STATE
Thursday, J
CAPITAL CITY
ALB
NEW CLI
COMPL STA
Tuesday
CAPITAL CITY
ALB
NE
CL COMPL
ST
CAPITAL CITY
A
NE
CL
COM
S Sat
SCHENECTA
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 24
BROOKLYN
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
JUL 28
OSWEG PALLA
D. 15,
JUL
HOLYOK
TRANS
D. 2
JUL
HERALD
NEW YO
JUL 18

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK SERVICE
CAIRO HERALD
July 26, 1962

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK SERVICE
CAIRO HERALD
July 25, 1962

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK SERVICE
HUDSON LOCAL
July 25, 1962

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK SERVICE
HUDSON PALLADIUM TIMES
Thurs., July 14, 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 24 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
JUL 28 1962

OSWEGO, N.Y.
PALLADIUM-TIMES
D. 15,065
JUL 14 1962

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
D. 26,063
JUL 18 1962

HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUL 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728
JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,409
JUL 21 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
JUL 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JUL 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 22 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
AUG 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728
JUL 29 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997
JUL 27 1962

SUNDAY REP. SPFLD
July 15, 1962

FIEDLER HAS EARL WILD AS GUEST AT POPS

Annual Performance to Be at Lenox Aug. 2

LENOX—Arthur Fiedler has announced the program for the appearance of the Boston Pops at Tanglewood Thursday, Aug. 2. The annual concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony

EARL WILD

Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will feature pianist Earl Wild playing the concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra by George Gershwin.

All Seats Reserved

The concert, which will begin at 8 p. m. in the music shed at Tanglewood, will begin with the Boston Pops' famous rendition of Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever." The balance of the program includes the Suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' and Lust, Waltzes, the Pines of Rome by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein .

The entire Music Shed will be reserved for this performance by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, and tickets will be on sale at the Berkshire Festival Box Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, beginning at 9 a. m. Friday. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available beginning at noon on the day of the concert. The gates will be opened at 6 p. m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826
AUG 3 1962

Big Audience Hears Pops at Tanglewood

LENOX (UPI) — The largest Tanglewood audience in two years turned out Thursday night for the annual appearance of the Boston Pops.

Reports said 12,354 persons gathered at the Music Shed to hear the concert conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The program was a benefit for the Boston Symphony summer school held here every summer. A total of $34,700 was raised for the school.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 3 1962

12,354 Hear Boston "Pops" At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX. — Tanglewood in its most jovial and benevolently commercial mood once again featured the Boston "Pops" Orchestra last night, with Arthur Fiedler conducting. Many of the players were the same who have been purveying Bach, Mozart and other major composers in recent weeks. It is interesting to see these men change their approach to the music completely.

Splended weather drew 12,354 to the music shed and huge lawn as against 10,799 last years. The resultant benefit to the Berkshire Music Center soared from 1961's $24,800 to $34,700.

The Berkhire Festival heads always think in grooves, and often in ruts. For the fourth consecutive season, the large and capable Earl Wild was piano soloist, and he played Gershwin's Concerto in F, no stranger to "Pops" programs.

"West Side" Medley

The smashingly good medley from Bernstein's "West Side Story" was repeated from a previous year, to the delight of the thousands of teen-agers present. They also exulted over the encores, the theme from "Exodus," the long and delightfully varied "Pops Roundup," "Moon River" and "76 Trombones." In the latter, Fiedler encountered rhythmic clapping from the audience, but contrived to lose them in the maze of the clever arrangement, which worked in snatches of America's famous marches.

An innovation was placing "The Stars and Stripes Forever," the usual signature piece, at the opening of the concert.

The Gershwin Concerto in F was probably supposed to be the high point of the evening, but at times it palled in spite of crisp handling by the soloist and conductor. The second section in its slower passages brought some of the really eloquent moments.

A Suite from Massenet's "Le Cid," including four types of Spanish dances and songs, was light, smart fare. Waltzes by Josef Strauss, "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust," were surprisingly conventional and stiff at times, but later unbent to have some pliancy.

"Pines of Rome"

The tastes of the highly mixed audience found the best musical meeting place of the evening in Respighi's "The Pines of Rome." The four sections, played without a break, gave Fiedler an opportunity to draw vivid pictures from the orchestra. First, children played noisily in the gardens of the Villa Borghese. Then the listener explored a crumbling Catacomb, and dreamed of people buried there. The mood lifted to one of evening quietudes, and in the moonlight of the Janiculum a nightingale sang, this being the mooted passage assigned to a recorded bird-song.

The "Pops" Orchestra displayed its ability to produce a gradual crescendo to stunning intensity in the final section, depicting the march of ancient Roman legions along the Appian Way.

The evening's specialized music often seemed superficial, after regular Tanglewood fare, but it was highly entertaining and skill-

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192
AUG 3 1962

12,354 Hear Boston Pops At Tanglewood

LENOX, (UPI)—The largest Tanglewood audience in two years turned out Thursday night for the annual appearance of the Boston Pops.

Reports said 12,354 persons gathered at the Music Shed to hear the concert conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The program was a benefit for the Boston Symphony summer school held here every summer. A total of $34,700 was raised for the school.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 8 1962

Boston Pops Draws Mob For Tanglewood Concert

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7.

The annual Boston Pops concert last Thursday night (2) at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, drew 6,354 patrons to the Shed, and approximately 6,000 on the surrounding lawns, benefitting the Center's scholarship fund by an estimated $34,700.

Attendance for the affair, batoned by Arthur Fiedler and featuring Earl Wilde as piano soloist, was some 1,500 in excess of last year's total.

174

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 3 1962

TRANSCRIPT

At Tanglewood

Fiedler and Boston Pops Thrill 12,000 in Shed

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Prior to Charles Munch, the present but retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, there was Serge Koussevitzky; and prior to Koussevitzky, there was Pierre Monteux; and prior to Monteux, there was a man named Karl Muck.

In his orchestra was a very active and bright young member called Arthur Fiedler. At one point in his career, this young man (he must have been very young) turned to conducting—when, no one could remember, but as far back as memory functions, he has been conducting the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Relaxing Program

The orchestra, largely members of the Boston Symphony with first-chair men excused, performed last night at Tanglewood Shed a typical rousing, good-natured, romantic, relaxing program. A program that any populace would select for itself. To some the occasion was a good companion underneath the stars, a bit of wine, a far away look and the orchestra singing in the wilderness. To others the music was the reckless fun of running a Rolls Royce through a shakedown cruise. A bit of bizarre bizazz for the jaded mind that had never heard Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever—at least not like this.

It is nothing less than genius that creates so popular a program that in Boston it calls forth such widely divergent groups to take over The Hall as the New England Conservatory of Music, the General Electric Co., The Appalacian Mountain Club, The Hoo Hoo Club and, I'm told, The Brotherhood of Pasterers.

The programs that almost always include a concerto, last night offered Gershwin's Concerto in F, with the very able Bostonian, Earl Wild at the piano. It is unnecessary to add that this popular work drove the audience wild, but it might be noted that Fiedler had to deftly direct their over-enthusiastic applause to a halt so that the piece could be heard to the end; that selections from West Side Story played by Pops became so singable, the audience occasionally joined in the chorus, romantically lagging the tempo as one might expect.

Shaking Experience

"The Pines of Rome" by Respighi, which could probably be heard five miles away, was a shaking experience for those at closer than a 100-yard range. Except for the dubbed-in bird, which may, I think, be still purchased from the Concert Record Gramophone Co. on record No. 6105, the effect of the closing "Pines of the Appian Way" was that of temper tantrum in the tympanni, but then again, such criticism is not, perhaps, in the spirit of the affair.

The Pops (for potpourri, or tonic) was very popular for more than 12,000 people last night and probably will continue to be for many, light and carefree nights to come.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

AUG 3 1962

Music: Pops Under Fiedler Heard at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's concert at Tangelwood by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, was a musical event of ups-and-downs. One of the most glowing aspects was an audience of 12,354.

This annual concert is given to benefit the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood. Last night's attendance enriched the school by $34,700.

For the fourth consecutive annual "pops" night at Tanglewood, Earl Wild was piano soloist, playing Gershwin's Concerto in F for the third time. Last summer was an innovation when Wild played Tchaikovsky's B-flat major concerto. If Wild's performances of these was something more than mediocre, this perennial situation might be less of a stalemate.

'Cid' Not Film Version

Another point in question was the inclusion of a suite from "Le Cid" by the 19th century French composer, Jules Massenet. An entirely different "Cid" is in film vogue. Many people were fooled, but one could insist always that it was their fault.

They certainly weren't disappointed, musically. The work is a quadrangle of brilliant sketches — shallow, but exciting to the ear. "Castillane" was served as a traipsing Spanish tune with much castanetting, with tambourines coming in at strategic points.

The familiar "Aragonaise" laid heavy stress on its operatic type, which Fiedler translated into an old-fashioned waltz at Skelter speed. He transformed "Aubade" into a haughty Spanish dance filled with instrumental surprises — plucked string, triangle and flash finish. Heavy punctuations were meted out in the concluding "Navarraise," with folkish melody soaring over percussion.

Big bonanza of the program was Respighi's "Pines of Rome." Other works were Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," Josef Strauss' "Love of Life" waltzes and a medley from Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story."

Without intending to muffle any of Fiedler's thunder, it must be said that the orchestra did the better job with Respighi's "Pines." The loud, prolonged children's chatter in the Villa Borghese was a tidal wave of vitality. Fiedler served to keep tempo and increasing volume in tow.

The catacombs section grew and diminished in intensity with stealth, making sounds of marvelous richness in low strings and basses. Oboe and flute solos by John Holmes and James Pappoutsakis were focal points of the Janiculum episode. The harp, played by Olivia Luetcke, added glamor and the nightingale recording brought about the usual smacks of delight.

Fiedler made the legions march just as sonorously down the Appian Way as any other conductor who wields the baton over the Boston Symphony, but this is the first time we've heard the full complement of strings and winds almost completely submerged in Timpani, cymbals and tam-tam.

Wild gave a key - skimming performance of the Gershwin concerto. Adequate is the word to describe it. There was a rote quality in every phrase, excepting some of the more sentimental sighs in the slow movement.

Rhapsodical Jazz Style

Fiedler's Gershwin is smack center of the rhapsodical jazz style, inlaid with dated dignity. The orchestral start of the first movement was not allowed to stall, though the pianist did a little readjusting of tempo. The broad theme at the end of the movement was stunning in balanced volume and unyielding rhythmic pulse.

Wild went along with this insofar as his technique and stoical personality would allow. But the end result was far from a Gershwin "coup."

It would take on ardent streamlined band to outdo the Boston Pops' rip-roaring performance of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes." We can't imagine a more rousing concert - opener. The Josef Strauss waltz was Fiedler - Pops metier at its best. The rhythms virtually glided and sound was absolutely lustrous.

Tonight, the Berkshire Music Festival begins its fifth week. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony and Festival Chorus in Debussy's Three Nocturnes, also Honegger's fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La Valse." Soloist of this all French program is Samuel Mayes in Staint-Saens' First Cello Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 3 1962

Music Review

The Pops Was a Picnic

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE ATTENDANCE figure, 12,354, at Tanglewood last night vies with the performers and the music for the top of the news. The invitation and urging of the management to take advantage of the evening and the spot for early arrival and picnics was accepted by an unprecedented share of the huge audience. We trust a sun-up photograph will be taken of the lawn behind the Shed. The paper-cup debris should look, in proper focus, like a gigantic hailstorm.

The attraction, of course, was the famed Boston Pops Orchestra with its conductor, Arthur Fiedler. The program promised Sousa, Massenet, Josef Strauss, Respighi, Gershwin, the concerto in F with Earl Wild as piano soloist, and Bernstein.

* * *

THE MANAGEMENT had taken pains to add benches to the sides of the Shed to provide many additional seats, but the numbers who bring their own folding chairs is one of the phenomena of Tanglewood audiences now at all times, and last night they presented bank after bank of listeners more comfortably ensconced, no doubt, than those in the more expensive reservations.

But the Jackson Pollock arrangements under the stars behind the Shed must have been nearly as numerous as that part of the audience under shelter. Just how much they heard or cared to hear would be a question for someone else to answer. The acoustics under normal conditions with a musically respectful audience are unbelievably good, but the rise and subsidence of murmurs must have prevented many who might have been interested in what was happening on-stage from hearing, as well as seeing or knowing. In some areas it sounded like a rehearsal for the Debussy "Sirenes" which tonight's audience will hear hummed.

* * *

ONE OF THE vantage spots for hearing outside of the Shed is the piazza of the old Brooks residence, a quarter mile from the stage. At that point Wild sounded brilliant and most capable, an estimate which the audience vehemently confirmed at the conclusion of his Gershwin concerto. At the moment the "West Side Story" should have been in process of being played, a young lady serving us an ice cream soda in the town of Lenox was summoned by a fellow-waitress by a call: "Ma-Ree-Ah!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 3 1962

TANGLEWOOD CROWD HEARS BOSTON POPS

Audience of 12,345 at Light Program Is Season's Biggest LENOX — Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra took over at Tanglewood Thursday night, drawing to the Berkshire Festival the biggest crowd of the season.

$34,700 Collected

Performing a light program before an audience of 12,345, close to 2000 more than last year, the Boston Pops added to the Berkshire Music Center a total of $34,700, about $10,000 more than last year.

The Pops concert, a successor for the past two years to Tanglewood on Parade, was pretty much the same old hat, but the audience loved it. In 1960 the Boston Symphony Orchestra officials split the benefits at the festival for the Berkshire Music Center, featuring in the first half of the season the Pops concert with Fiedler and in the last half performances by the students at the center with Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony, and members of the faculty taking part.

History shows that Tanglewood, with an attractive program, can attract thousands of music lovers to the Berkshire Festival—if the weather is right. Thursday night, weather conditions could not have been more ideal; neither could anyone complain about the program. It seemed to please the 6000 persons seated in the huge Music Shed as well as the thousands listening from the spacious lawns.

Natural for Camps

For private camps in the area, many of which are holding parents' week end this week end, the Pops concert was a natural. The price was right, patrons were admitted to the grounds for a nominal fee and every blade of grass on the estate seemed to be covered.

Earl Wild was the featured soloist with Fiedler and the Boston Pops, giving an enthusiastic performance of Gershwin's piano concerto.

...TY NEWS BUREAU
...ANY, N.Y.
...EPAPER
...PPINGS
... NEW YORK
...ERVICE

...TIMES UNION
...gust 3, 1962

175

Boston Pops, Wilde Play To Large Concert Audience

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

One of the most popular and populous-musical events of the Tanglewood series of concerts is the annual appearance of the Boston Pops under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Members of the resident orchestra, minus the concert-master and the first chair men and women form the group which is used in the prolific output of classical and semi-classical recordings.

The Music Shed was preempted last night with an audience of 6,350, and some 3,000 al fresco patrons, scattered all over the spacious lawns.

The large audience, which, perhaps "doesn't know too much about music, but DOES know what it likes," was in perfect accord wtih Mr. Fiedler's program which included the Suite from "El Cid," by Massenet a group of waltzes by Joseph Strauss; the "Pines of Rome" by Respighi and a medley of songs from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein (an alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center) and the inevitable "Stars and Stripes Forever," by John Philip Sousa.

Wilde Masterful

Earl Wilde, distinguished American pianist, was accorded an ovation following his magnificent performance of the late composer's Concerto in F with the orchestra.

Mr. Wild played with masterful assurance and authority. He shaded the work with an unerring feeling for the constant shifting subleties and sophistications. The result was a thoroughly memorable performance of this American classic.

The listeners recognized such encore titles as "Look Sharp, Feel Sharp!" and the many intriguing arrangements of LeRoy Anderson.

Since the concert was a benefit performance for the music center, D. R. Munch is assured of a continuation of his fine leadership when he turns the reins over to his successor, Erich Leinsdorf in the fall.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

Music Shed — Tanglewood

Lenox, Massachusetts

Thursday, August 2, 1962, at 8:00

For the Benefit of the Berkshire Music Center

THE BOSTON POPS

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Soloist EARL WILD, Piano

PROGRAM

*The Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa

*Suite from "Le Cid" ..... Massenet
Castillane — Aragonaise — Aubade — Navarraise

*Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss

Pines of Rome ..... Respighi
I. The Pines of the Villa Borghese
II. The Pines near a Catacomb
III. The Pines of the Janiculum
IV. The Pines of the Appian Way

Intermission

*Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra ..... Gershwin
I. Allegro
II. Adagio; Andante con moto
III. Allegro agitato

Soloist: EARL WILD

*Selection from "West Side Story" ..... Bernstein
I Feel Pretty — Maria — Something's Coming — Tonight —
One Hand, One Heart — Cool — A-mer-i-ca

Mr. Wild plays the Baldwin Piano

Baldwin Piano

*RCA Victor Recording

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
PRESS SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
August 3, 1962

Boston Pops, Wilde Play To Large Concert Audience

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

One of the most popular and populous-musical events of the Tanglewood series of concerts is the annual appearance of the Boston Pops under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Members of the resident orchestra, minus the concert-master and the first chair men and women form the group which is used in the prolific output of classical and semi-classical recordings.

The Music Shed was preempted last night with an audience of 6,350, and some 3,000 al fresco patrons, scattered all over the spacious lawns.

The large audience, which, perhaps "doesn't know too much about music, but DOES know what it likes," was in perfect accord wtih Mr. Fiedler's program which included the Suite from "El Cid," by Massenet a group of waltzes by Joseph Strauss; the "Pines of Rome" by Respighi and a medley of songs from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein (an alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center) and the inevitable "Stars and Stripes Forever," by John Philip Sousa.

Wilde Masterful

Earl Wilde, distinguished American pianist, was accorded an ovation following his magnificent performance of the late composer's Concerto in F with the orchestra.

Mr. Wild played with masterful assurance and authority. He shaded the work with an unerring feeling for the constant shifting subleties and sophistications. The result was a thoroughly memorable performance of this American classic.

The listeners recognized such encore titles as "Look Sharp, Feel Sharp!" and the many intriguing arrangements of LeRoy Anderson.

Since the concert was a benefit performance for the music center, D. R. Munch is assured of a continuation of his fine leadership when he turns the reins over to his successor, Erich Leinsdorf in the fall.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

Music Shed — Tanglewood

Lenox, Massachusetts

Thursday, August 2, 1962, at 8:00

For the Benefit of the Berkshire Music Center

THE BOSTON POPS

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Soloist EARL WILD, Piano

PROGRAM

*The Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa

*Suite from "Le Cid" ..... Massenet
Castillane — Aragonaise — Aubade — Navarraise

*Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss

Pines of Rome ..... Respighi
I. The Pines of the Villa Borghese
II. The Pines near a Catacomb
III. The Pines of the Janiculum
IV. The Pines of the Appian Way

Intermission

*Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra ..... Gershwin
I. Allegro
II. Adagio; Andante con moto
III. Allegro agitato

Soloist: EARL WILD

*Selection from "West Side Story" ..... Bernstein
I Feel Pretty — Maria — Something's Coming — Tonight —
One Hand, One Heart — Cool — A-mer-i-ca

Mr. Wild plays the Baldwin Piano

Baldwin Piano

*RCA Victor Recording

176

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

ood Idea Strengthened by Gala

Students Rise to Occasion

By Louis Chapin
Lenox, Mass.

"Gala Evening at Tanglewood" has a gossamer sound to it, and there were certainly lightly spun festive parts during the series of programs produced yesterday by various Berkshire Music Center departments.

But by and large, the fairly modest 2,500 or so who came for the cool afternoon and turned their collars up for the evening were met with serious musical business.

Between 4 o'clock and 11, with an hour out for picnic supper, they could hear performances properly representative of the range of work undertaken by this summer's students in chamber music, composition, choral singing and conducting, and orchestral playing—not to mention many instances of solo performance.

* * *

The day's seriousness was unforeseeably responsive to the passing yesterday morning of Irving Fine, the composer and former Tanglewood teacher who less than two weeks ago conducted his own new Symphony with the orchestra. Specifically dedicated to him was fervent music: two sections from Daniel Pinkham's Easter Cantata, sung outdoors by the Tanglewood Choir under Lorna Cooke de Varon, who announced the dedication.

The words fairly spilled out, wonderfully embroidered in the trumpet, celeste, and glockenspiel, and later deeply underlined in the brass as a whole: "And the angel said unto them, Fear not, for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said . . ." The second section was firm and confident: "This is the day that the Lord hath made . . ."

The earlier program of student compositions in the theater happened to contain two works designated "In Memoriam," the most eloquent of which was written by Peter Lewis in honor of the novelist James Agee. Performed by narrator and a mixed chamber ensemble with piano, and conducted by the composer, it had received the 1961 Samuel Wechsler Commission.

Geoffrey Lewis, as narrator, preceded the three sections of the music with telling readings from Mr. Agee's "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men." These passages came through as pungent and sometimes poignant poetry of the rural South, superbly and movingly read.

The music responded to the poetry with some eloquence, warm and sonorous at times, at others percussively stabbed at by the piano. It showed a momentum that can be achieved through a sensitive sequence of words and music.

* * *

There was variety on both of these programs (following a chamber music concert which I did not hear), and such quantity as to allow mention of outstanding features only—moments of idiomatic sensibility among short pieces for piano and flute respectively by Pieter van den Toorn and David Johnson; the light touch of the Tanglewood dormitory in "Three Songs on the Text of the Lenox School Regulations," for soprano, guitar, and side drum by John Crane, sometimes unintelligible, but funny anyway; Larry Stempel's "In Memoriam Dag Hammarskjold" for string quartet, alternately tenuous and angry, somewhat thinspoken.

With Mr. Pinkham's Cantata on the choir program was music by Purcell, Vecchi, Charpentier, and Mussorgsky, capably directed by students. Hugh Ross, department head, conducted a highly imaginative suite by Mark Bucci, most of whose several texts were from Blake, "The Tiger," garlanded with forest birds and concluding with a snarl, was especially picturesque.

The third choral faculty member, Alfred Nash Patterson, conducted another setting of one of the Blake bits by John Cooper—"Ah! Sunflower"—and closed the program, facing the darkening distances of Lake Mahkeenac, with Brahms' Five Gypsy Songs.

* * *

The gong was already pulling the audience over from the main house to the Music Shed for the final concert of this packed day by the student orchestra, whose program opened with Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," continued with Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, and concluded with the first, fourth, fifth and sixth movements of Mahler's Third Symphony.

The Brahms, conducted by Seymour Lipkin, might be considered a somewhat aptly romantic work, but in this stylistically unlaced context it seemed lean and tight, though none the less warm. The generous, sonorous dedication which Florence Kopleff, herself a Tanglewood alumna, brought to its solo, provided, with steady support from the orchestra and men's chorus, another eloquent high point for the day.

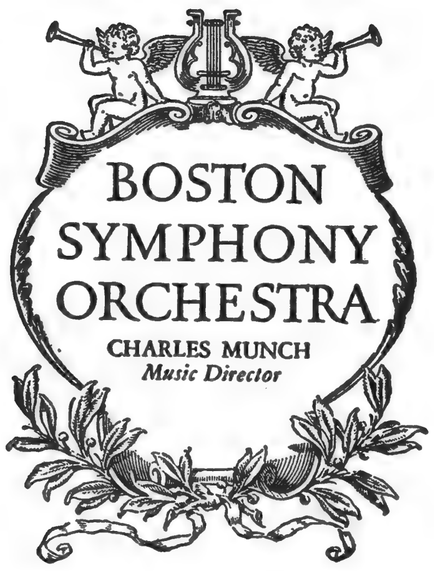
Miss Kopleff returned for the contralto solo in Mahler's fourth movement, and sang it with subdued fervor. Both her performances were from memory. The women's chorus added their exhilaration to the bells of the fifth movement.

But the extraordinary brilliance of this performance was first and last the accomplishment of the orchestra itself, under the expansive direction of Richard Burgin. The work seemed like all outdoors made vastly and originally subjective; its immense first movement, shifting from trombone proclamation to woodwind chorale and later to full-blown marching (the brass finely concerted) is reflected in the relative serenity of the last movement.

And the firm way this orchestra handled it with only here and there some understandable roughness in detail, gave the enthusiastic audience its final reason for the day to approve the basic Tanglewood idea.

Such a meeting between the public—whose admission fees, incidentally, helped to swell the Revolving Scholarship Fund—and the Music Center students is emphatically important. Perhaps it should be worked more closely, more selectively, and more often, into the weekend Berkshire Festival calendar, integrated with the Boston Symphony concert.

GALA EVENING. AUG 23rd 1962



TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS

A GALA EVENING

OF THE

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Charles Munch, Director

Thursday, August 23, 1962

For the Benefit of The Berkshire Music Center

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

A GALA EVENING AT TANGLEWOOD

Performances by the Berkshire Music Center

PROGRAMS

4:00 CHAMBER MUSIC — THEATRE-CONCERT HALL

Department of Chamber Music: Richard Burgin and William Kroll

BEETHOVEN ..... SONATA IN G MINOR, OPUS 5, NO. 2

I. Adagio sostenuto ed espressivo—Allegro

William Brent—violoncello — Sumiko Kohno—piano

MOZART — SERENADE FOR WINDS, IN C MINOR, NO. 12, K. 388

IV. Allegro

Ira Deutsch—oboe
David Roberts—oboe
Yoshihiro Obata—clarinet
Jack Graham—clarinet
David Carroll—bassoon
Ryohei Nakagawa—bassoon
Bradford DeMilo—French horn
Barton Parker—French horn

CHAVEZ — TOCCATA FOR PERCUSSION INSTRUMENTS

Reginald Bonnin
Peter Canady
Ronald Dowd
Frank Epstein
Dennis Kain
Frederick Withers

LOUIS FORNER—Conductor

MENDELSSOHN — OCTET FOR STRINGS, IN E FLAT MAJOR, OPUS 20

I. Allegro moderato, ma con fuoco

Won-Mo Kim—violin
Barbara Heinen—violin
Ruth Rabinovitz—violin
Carolyn Mather—violin
Pamela Brand—viola
Barbara Allen—viola
Raphael Sommer—violoncello
Earl Williams—violoncello

5:00 COMPOSITION — THEATRE-CONCERT HALL

Department of Composition: Lukas Foss, Iain Hamilton, Witold Lutoslawski
Stanley Silverman, Administrative Assistant

LARRY STEMPEL (New York City) — IN MEMORIAM DAG HAMMERSKJOLD (From Three Memoriams for String Quartet)

PIETER VAN DEN TOORN (Montclair, New Jersey) — PIANO STUDIES

I. Introduction
II. Variations
III. Finale

Composer at the Piano

DAVID JOHNSON (Rochester, New York) — THREE PIECES FOR FLUTE ALONE

Performed by the Composer

LOUIS ANGELINI (Utica, New York) — PIECE FOR SOLO VIOLIN

Won-Mo Kim—violin

JOHN CRANE (Washington, D. C.) — THREE SONGS ON THE TEXT OF THE LENOX SCHOOL REGULATIONS

I. Night Watchman
II. Fire
III. Drinking

Carollyn Clark—Soprano

PETER LEWIS (Bradford, Rhode Island) — IMAGES IN MEMORIAM JAMES AGEE

SAMUEL WECHSLER COMMISSION, 1961

GEOFFREY LEWIS, Narrator

Conducted by the Composer

from "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men" by James Agee—Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston

THE FROMM FELLOWSHIP PLAYERS

Kenneth Goldsmith—violin
Nancy Cirillo—violin
Jesse Levine—viola
Edgar Fischer—violoncello
Paul Jacobs—piano

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER INSTRUMENTALISTS

Susan Cohn—flute
Peter Bloom—oboe
William Lewis—clarinet
Larry Stewart—bassoon
Stephen Seiffert—French horn
Ronald Dowd—percussion

Stanley Silverman—guitar

6:00 PICNIC HOUR

6:45 FANFARE — MAIN HOUSE

7:00 TANGLEWOOD CHOIR — MAIN HOUSE PORCH

Choral Department: Hugh Ross; Lorna Cooke de Varon, Alfred Nash Patterson, Associates;
Dan Border, Administrative Assistant

DANIEL PINKHAM — EASTER CANTATA

For Chorus, Brass and Percussion

III. And The Angel Said Unto Them
IV. This Is the Day

LORNA COOKE DE VARON—Conductor

HENRY PURCELL — WITH DROOPING WINGS

From Dido and Aeneas

ORAZIO VECCHI — LEGGIADRETTO CLORINO

MAURICE CASEY—Conductor

MARC-ANTOINE CHARPENTIER — MESSE DE MINUIT POUR NOËL

Kyrie eleison
Gloria

Ellen Hahn — Theodore Bradshaw
Sophia Beryk — Russell Locke
Louis Forner

BERNARD DE SURCY—Conductor

MARK BUCCI — FLORA AND FAUNA

Prelude — The Mustard Seed
The Sunflower — The Rose Tree — The Tiger — The Birds
The Lamb — Postlude
Ellen Hahn — Theodore Bradshaw
Elaine Rosen — Maurice Casey

HUGH ROSS—Conductor

MODEST MOUSSORGSKY — JOSHUA

STUART RALEIGH—Conductor

JOHN COOPER — AH! SUN-FLOWER

Sophia Beryk—soprano

JOHANNES BRAHMS — FIVE GYPSY SONGS

Theodore Bradshaw—tenor — Martha Rock—soprano

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON—Conductor

Accompanists: Seymour Schonberg — Stuart Raleigh
Trumpets: Peter Boeing, Brian Coogan — JoJhn DiPetrillo, James Redding
French horns: William Hammond — Barton Parker
Trombones: William Booth, R. Philip Jameson — André Smith
Tuba: Ronald Munson
Timpani and Percussion: Reginald Bonnin, Peter Canady — Dennis Kain

THE TANGLEWOOD CHOIR

SOPRANOS
Sophia Beryk
Patricia Brown
Carollyn Clark
Eileen Flexer
Gertrude Ffolliott
Ellen Hahn
Sheila Kain
Amy Kaiser
Lucy Kraus
Martha Rock

ALTOS
Susan Anathan
Brenda Cole
Ester Deckert
Patricia Gilroy
Leslie Kandell
A. Toby Korn
Jane Lawton
Janet Pollitt
Elaine Rosen
Deborah Schubert

TENORS
Leonard Atherton
Theodore Bradshaw
Russell Locke
Robert Margouleff
Louis Mariano
Paul Richter
Phillip Wheeler

BARITONES
Warren Brown
Maurice Casey
Bernard Bailly DeSurcy
Eugene Gover
Stuart Raleigh
Seymour Schonberg
Stephen Simon
Edward Winston
Peter Wolfe

(OVER)

8:00 THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER ORCHESTRA—MUSIC SHED

Orchestra Department: Richard Burgin; assisted by Seymour Lipkin

STRAUSS — DEATH AND TRANSFIGURATION, TONE POEM, OPUS 24

RICHARD BURGIN—Conductor

BRAHMS RHAPSODY FOR ALTO, MEN'S CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA, OPUS 53

FLORENCE KOPLEFF—Alto
SEYMOUR LIPKIN—Conductor

INTERMISSION

MAHLER — SYMPHONY NO. 3, IN D MINOR, WITH WOMEN'S CHORUS AND ALTO SOLO

I. Vigorous, decisive
IV. Slow, mysterious
V. Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression
VI. Slow, peaceful, expressive

FLORENCE KOPLEFF—Alto
RICHARD BURGIN—Conductor

Men of the Festival Chorus prepared by Hugh Ross
Women of the Festival Chorus prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson

ORCHESTRA OF THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

VIOLINS

Won-Mo-Kim Concertmaster

Hiroko Abe
Marjorie Bacher
Priscilla Brown
Davetta Caughey
Edgar Edwards
Lyndl Fowler
Lucille Gewinner
Barbara Heinen
Mark Knight
Carolyn Mather
Diane Merrill
Jean Mouillere
Robert Pecci
Charles Ponall
Ruth Rabinovitz
Claudia Rantucci
Carol Rowles
Martin Shapiro
Camilla Shelden
Michael Stevens
Barrett Stoll
Penelope Veach
Janice Walker

VIOLAS

Barbara Allen
Nancy Blacklock
Pamela Brand
Shirley Manuel
Catherine Melhorn
Frank Reilly
Janet Rush
Fukuhiko Saeki
Simone Tanguay

VIOLONCELLOS

Jane Barry
William Brent
Janet Burbank
Elizabeth Bush
Ingrid Heim
Gordon Lantz
Marla Smith
Raphael Sommer
Michael Stoughton
Jacques Sudrat
Marcelle Verignon
Earl Williams

BASSES

Diane Bulgarelli
David Danesi
Frank Proto
Sandra Robertson
David Willis

FLUTES

Susan Cohn
William Fuhrman
Paula Kelch
Sylvia Kendrick
Jacqueline Winston

OBOES

Peter Bloom
Rachel Brudnoy
James Byars
Ira Deutsch
David Roberts

CLARINETS

Janita Byars
Jack Graham
William Lewis
Yoshihiro Obata
Ronald Schnitzer
Winfield Swarr
Craig Watjen
Robert Wingert

BASSOONS

David Carroll
Lawrence D'Attilio
Ryohei Nakagawa
Karl Porter
Larry Stewart

FRENCH HORNS

Bradford DeMilo
Louis Forner
William Hammond
Wayne Horst
Barton Parker
Stephen Seiffert
Mary Anne Stephens

TRUMPETS

Peter Boeing
Brian Coogan
John DiPetrillo
James Redding
Robert Weber
Carleton Welchel

TROMBONES

William Booth
Phillip Jameson
Daral Rauscher
André Smith

TUBA

Ronald Munson
Stanley Towers

HARP

Evelia Taborda

TIMPANI AND PERCUSSION

Reginald Bonnin
Peter Canady
Ronald Dowd
Frank Epstein
Dennis Kain
Tele Lesbines
Frederick Withers

180

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Mrs. Koussevitzky has told the students here, "I remember when the Center was but a vision—a creative ideal of Serge Koussevitzky which he conceived at the eve of the First World War and which he was destined to bring to life in the United States of America during the first year of World War II. The plan he envisioned called for the dimensions and resources of a vast country, free and vigorous, eager and youthful in spirit. The great Boston Symphony Orchestra with a noble tradition gave body to the spirit. Thus a unique, daring, magnificent venture came into being. As we now look back on the past 20 years marked by world-shaking global evolutions it seems little short of a miracle that the Berkshire Music Center still holds its claim as a unique force in the musical world—that Tanglewood as each season comes and goes still adds a page to history."

The problem of financing such an undertaking has always been a thorny one, inasmuch as it is done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is already dependent on contributions for its continuation, and because students of music are seldom persons of means. Scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center take the form of grants towards tuition from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, which has been established by gifts from RCA Victor, the Rockefeller Foundation and others. But the continued sources of financial aid to the Tanglewood student are not sufficient to meet the costs of training him here. The annual deficit on the Center's operation is met by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In order to carry on the work of the Center, additional scholarship aid is needed; your inquiry on details of a partial or full scholarship will be gratefully received.

COMMITTEE FOR THE GALA EVENING

MRS. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Chairman

MISS ANNA R. ALEXANDRE
MRS. WILLIAM CRANE
MRS. DAVID HUXLEY
MRS. C. D. JACKSON
MME. ANNA DE LEUCHTENBERG
MRS. JOHN G. W. MAHANNA
MRS. LAWRENCE K. MILLER
MRS. THOMAS D. PERRY, JR.
MRS. JOHN H. RICE
MRS. BRUCE SANBORN
MRS. JOHN L. SENIOR
MISS GERTRUDE ROBINSON SMITH

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 21 1962

Change in Gala Evening

The Berkshire Music Center has announced a change in the program of the student orchestra at the Gala Evening, for the benefit of the Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, this Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center orchestra in two additional works and the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Movements of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, rather than a complete performance of the Mahler symphony as previously announced. The full program for this concert, the final event of Thursday's Gala Evening, will consist of Brahm's Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53, with Florence Kopleff, soloist, and the men of the Festival Chorus, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and the last three movements of the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler with Miss Kopleff as soloist, and the women of the Festival Chorus. Miss Kopleff, a distinguished alumna of the Music Center, has generously contributed her services.

The Gala Evening will actually begin a 4 o'clock with a program of chamber music prepared under the supervision of William Kroll, head of the Music Center's chamber music division. This concert will be presented in the Tanglewood Theater.

At 5 o'clock music by recent and present Tanglewood student composers will be heard in the Chamber Music Hall. Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players. This summer the composition department has been under the direction of Lukas Foss, and Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski have been composers-in-residence.

The Tanglewood Choir—students in the Department of Choral Music under the direction of Hugh Ross, assisted by Lorna Cooke deVaron and Alfred Nash Patterson—will give a concert at 7 o'clock under the leadership of student choral conductors. This program will be held on the porch of the Main House overlooking the view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains to the south of Tanglewood.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Thursday, August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
19, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

AUG 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,200

AUG 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826

AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191

AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

AUG 17 1962

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 22 1962

Mrs. Koussevitzky Heads Tanglewood Gala Evening

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky is chairman of this year's Gala Evening at Tanglewood tomorrow evening.

The performances by the student orchestra and chorus will benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and acting chairman of the music center faculty, will conduct the performance.

The program will present Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony, using the combined forces of the student orchestra and chorus, with Miss Florence Kopleff, Tanglewood alumna, as soloist.

Members of the committee in charge of arrangements for the event are Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mrs. William Crane, Mrs. David Huxley, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mme. Anna de Leuchtenberg, Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., Mrs. John H. Rice, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mrs. John L. Senior and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

AUG 15 1962

Gala Evening At Tanglewood On The 23rd

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Orchestral Conducting Department will conduct the student orchestra Thursday evening (Aug. 23; 8) at Tanglewood in the final event of the Berkshire Music Center's Gala Evening. Proceeds from the afternoon and evening events will benefit the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. All 270 students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music will participate in the musical events.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p. m. with a program of chamber music under the supervision of William Kroll, head of the Music Center's chamber music division. This concert will be presented in the Tanglewood Theatre.

At 5 music by recent and present Tanglewood student composers will be heard in the Chamber Music Hall. Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players. This summer the Composition Department has been under the direction of Lukas Foss, and Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski have been composers in residence.

The Tanglewood Choir — students in the Department of Choral Music under the direction of Hugh Ross, assisted by Lorna Cooke deVaron and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a concert at 7 under the leadership of student choral conductors. This program will be held on the porch of the Main House overlooking the view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains to the south of Tanglewood.

The concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at 8 will be devoted to Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3. Richard Burgin will conduct the Orchestra and Festival Chorus with Florence Kopleff, alto soloist, in the Music Shed, which has over 5,000 unreserved seats available for this performance.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 3 with the hour between 3 and 7 designated as the picnic hour. Patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

180

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Mrs. Koussevitzky has told the students here, "I remember when the Center was but a vision—a creative ideal of Serge Koussevitzky which he conceived at the eve of the First World War and which he was destined to bring to life in the United States of America during the first year of World War II. The plan he envisioned called for the dimensions and resources of a vast country, free and vigorous, eager and youthful in spirit. The great Boston Symphony Orchestra with a noble tradition gave body to the spirit. Thus a unique, daring, magnificent venture came into being. As we now look back on the past 20 years marked by world-shaking global evolutions it seems little short of a miracle that the Berkshire Music Center still holds its claim as a unique force in the musical world—that Tanglewood as each season comes and goes still adds a page to history."

The problem of financing such an undertaking has always been a thorny one, inasmuch as it is done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is already dependent on contributions for its continuation, and because students of music are seldom persons of means. Scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center take the form of grants towards tuition from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, which has been established by gifts from RCA Victor, the Rockefeller Foundation and others. But the continued sources of financial aid to the Tanglewood student are not sufficient to meet the costs of training him here. The annual deficit on the Center's operation is met by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In order to carry on the work of the Center, additional scholarship aid is needed; your inquiry on details of a partial or full scholarship will be gratefully received.

COMMITTEE FOR THE GALA EVENING

MRS. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Chairman

MISS ANNA R. ALEXANDRE
MRS. WILLIAM CRANE
MRS. DAVID HUXLEY
MRS. C. D. JACKSON
MME. ANNA DE LEUCHTENBERG
MRS. JOHN G. W. MAHANNA
MRS. LAWRENCE K. MILLER
MRS. THOMAS D. PERRY, JR.
MRS. JOHN H. RICE
MRS. BRUCE SANBORN
MRS. JOHN L. SENIOR
MISS GERTRUDE ROBINSON SMITH

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Thursday, August 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 19, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
AUG 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,200
AUG 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826
AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 15 1962

Gala Evening At Tanglewood On The 23rd

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Orchestral Conducting Department, will conduct the student orchestra Thursday evening (Aug. 23: 8) at Tanglewood in the final event of the Berkshire Music Center's Gala Evening. Proceeds from the afternoon and evening events will benefit the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. All 270 students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music will participate in the musical events.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p. m. with a program of chamber music under the supervision of William Kroll, head of the Music Center's chamber music division. This concert will be presented in the Tanglewood Theatre.

At 5 music by recent and present Tanglewood student composers will be heard in the Chamber Music Hall. Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players. This summer the Composition Department has been under the direction of Lukas Foss, and Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski have been composers in residence.

The Tanglewood Choir — students in the Department of Choral Music under the direction of Hugh Ross, assisted by Lorna Cooke deVaron and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a concert at 7 under the leadership of student choral conductors. This program will be held on the porch of the Main House overlooking the view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains to the south of Tanglewood.

The concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at 8 will be devoted to Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3. Richard Burgin will conduct the Orchestra and Festival Chorus with Florence Kopleff, alto soloist, in the Music Shed, which has over 5,000 unreserved seats available for this performance.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 3 with the hour between 5 and 7 designated as the picnic hour. Patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
AUG 21 1962

Change in Gala Evening

The Berkshire Music Center has announced a change in the program of the student orchestra at the Gala Evening, for the benefit of the Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, this Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center orchestra in two additional works and the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Movements of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, rather than a complete performance of the Mahler symphony as previously announced. The full program for this concert, the final event of Thursday's Gala Evening, will consist of Brahm's Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53, with Florence Kopleff, soloist, and the men of the Festival Chorus, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and the last three movements of the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler with Miss Kopleff as soloist, and the women of the Festival Chorus. Miss Kopleff, a distinguished alumna of the Music Center, has generously contributed her services.

The Gala Evening will actually begin a 4 o'clock with a program of chamber music prepared under the supervision of William Kroll, head of the Music Center's chamber music division. This concert will be presented in the Tanglewood Theater.

At 5 o'clock music by recent and present Tanglewood student composers will be heard in the Chamber Music Hall. Music for this concert will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players. This summer the composition department has been under the direction of Lukas Foss, and Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski have been composers-in-residence.

The Tanglewood Choir—students in the Department of Choral Music under the direction of Hugh Ross, assisted by Lorna Cooke deVaron and Alfred Nash Patterson—will give a concert at 7 o'clock under the leadership of student choral conductors. This program will be held on the porch of the Main House overlooking the view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains to the south of Tanglewood.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 22 1962

Mrs. Koussevitzky Heads Tanglewood Gala Evening

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky is chairman of this year's Gala Evening at Tanglewood tomorrow evening.

The performances by the student orchestra and chorus will benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and acting chairman of the music center faculty, will conduct the performance.

The program will present Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony, using the combined forces of the student orchestra and chorus, with Miss Florence Kopleff, Tanglewood alumna, as soloist.

Members of the committee in charge of arrangements for the event are Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mrs. William Crane, Mrs. David Huxley, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mme. Anna de Leuchtenberg, Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., Mrs. John H. Rice, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mrs. John L. Senior and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
AUG 16 1962

121 Fm 5

To Benefit Tanglewood Fund

270 Students In Berkshire Event

By PEGGY BROWN, Society Editor

All 270 students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of cusic will participate in the Berkshire Music Center's Gala Evening next Thursday evening (August 23).

Proceeds from the afternoon-into-evening events will benefit the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p.m. with a program of chamber music prepared under the supervision of William Kroll. He is head of the Music Center's chamber music division. This concert will be presented in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox.

At 5 p.m. the Fromm Fellowship Players will present music by recent and present Tanglewood student composers in the Chamber Music Hall. Lukas Foss headed the composition department this summer, with Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski composers-in-residence.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a concert at 7 p.m. under the leadership of student choral conductors. This program will be held on the porch of the Main House overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains south of Tanglewood.

The department of choral music has been under the direction of Hugh Ross, assisted by Lorna Cooke deVaron and Alfred Nash Patterson.

STUDENT ORCHESTRA IN FINAL EVENT

Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and acting head of the Berkshire Music Center's Orchestral conducting department will conduct the final event of the Gala Evening.

This will be a concert by the student orchestra and will be devoted to Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3. Burgin will conduct the Orchestra and Festival Chorus with Florence Kopleff, alto soloist, in the Music Shed which has over 5,000 unreserved seats available for this performance.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 3 p.m. with the hour between 6 and 7 p.m. designated as the Picnic Hour. Patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers or purchase box lunches at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Admission to the Gala Evening is $2.50 and includes all events. Box seats are available at $5. Tickets are now on sale at the Tanglewood box office, Lenox,

Socially Speaking

FRIENDS OF CENTER SUPPORT SCHOLARSHIPS

The Berkshire Music Center is dependent upon two principal sources of income: tuition from students able to pay and gifts from those who elect to become Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Were it not for the Friends, many young musicians would have to miss the unique opportunity provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its Tanglewood summer school.

Of the 270 students enrolled this summer, more than 60 per cent receive full tuition. Of these a large number are provided with board and dormitory accomodations. Few of the remaining 40 per cent are able to meet the full extent of the fees.

The Friends believe in the ideals and work of the Center and contribute to its support. The Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund was started in 1949 through a series of gifts of RCA ictor and is chiefly maintained through the support of the Friends.

A voluntary gift constitutes membership in the Friends. In appreciation of their contributions, members are invited to the events in which the students participate each season.

The office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is located at the Main Gate at Tanglewood. Donations are received there or by mail to the Friends Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

STORK CLUB NOTE

To Mr. and Mrs. Paul McGee of Scotch Plains, N. J., a girl, Pauline, on August 8 at Muhlenberg Hospital in Plainfield. The baby's mother is the former Catherine Foley of Brighton.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 23 1962

Gala Evening

270 Music Center Students To Take Part in Benefit

TANGLEWOOD — The annual Gala Evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship fund will take place at Tanglewood today. All 270 students of the Music Center will take part in the day's activities.

Composer's Concert

The composers' concert at 5 in the Chamber Music Hall has been arranged by Lukas Foss, Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski.

The program follows:

In Memoriam Dag Hammerskjold — Larry Stempl

Piano Studies (played by the composer) — Pieter Van den Toorn

Three Pieces for Flute Alone (to be performed by the composer) — David Johnson

Piece for solo violin — Lewis Angelini
Won-Mo Kim, violin

Three songs for soprano, guitar and percussion (on the text of the Lenox School regulations) — John Crane
Carolyn Clark, soprano
Stanley Silverman, guitar
Ronald Dowd, percussion

Images (In Memoriam James Agee) — Peter Lewis
Samuel Wechsler Prize Composition at the Berkshire Music Center, 1961

Music will be provided by the Fromm Fellowship Players, Kenneth Goldsmith and Nancy Cirillo, violins, Jesse Levine, viola, and Edgar Fischer, cello. Instrumentalists from the Berkshire Music Center's Department of Instrumental Music include: Susan Cohn, flute, Peter Bloom, oboe, William Lewis, clarinet, Larry Stewart, bassoon, Stephen Seiffert, French horn, Ronald Davis, percussion.

The period between 6 and 6:45 has been designated as the supper hour, and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria. The Tanglewood choir will give a concert of choral music on the porch of the Main House at 7.

Richard Burgin and Seymour Lipkin will conduct the Berkshire Music Center orchestra and festival chorus in the Music Shed at 8 p.m. The program for this portion of the Gala Evening includes Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Brahms' "Alto Rhapsody" with Florence Kopleff, alto, and the men of the festival chorus conducted by Seymour Lipkin. Richard Burgin will then conduct the first, fourth, fifth, and sixth movements of Gustave Mahler's Symphony No. 3, with Florence Kopleff as soloist and the women of the festival chorus.

Admission to Tanglewood for all Gala Evening events is $2.50 except for box seats for the Shed concert at 8 which are $5. More than 5,000 unreserved seats in the Music Shed are available for the Berkshire Music Center orchestra's program.

Alumni Give $5,110

For the first time since its inception the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund has received more than $5,000 in one year from the alumni of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition to funds received from the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert, the Gala Evening, and the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund receives each year funds from former students who have received scholarship money from the revolving fund. This year 106 alumni have contributed $5,110. These contributions are made directly to the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 24 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
AUG 22 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
AUG 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 535,565
AUG 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
AUG 23 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 21 1962

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, August 21, 1962
GLENS FALLS, N.Y.
POST-STAR
D. 16,349
AUG 21 1962
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
AUG 22 1962

Program change made

THE Berkshire Music Center announced a change in the program of the student orchestra at the Gala Evening, for the benefit of the Music Center's Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund on Thursday, at 8 p.m. Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in two additional works and the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Movements of Mahler's Symphony No. 3 rather than a complete performance of the Mahler Symphony as previously announced. The complete program for this concert, the final event of Thursday's Gala Evening, will consist of Brahm's Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53, with Florence Kopleff, soloist, and the men of the Festival Chorus, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and the last three movements of the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler with Miss Kopleff as soloist, and the women of the Festival Chorus. Miss Kopleff, a distinguished alumna of the Music Center, has generously contributed her services to the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 3 p.m. for the Gala Evening, with the first student performance to begin at 4 p.m. in the Theatre. This will be a program of chamber music to be followed at 5 p.m. by music by Tanglewood composers in the Chamber Music Hall. The period between 6 p.m. and 6:45 p.m. has been designated as the picnic hour, and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

The concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will begin at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed.

182

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 24 1962

Tanglewood On Parade Brings Varied Offerings

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Thursday found Tanglewood on parade, which means that all its departments were open to the public that they might hear and perhaps evaluate what has been happening at the school for these past eight weeks.

Miss Kopleff Soloist

They heard, for example, from the chamber music department, the composition department, the choral department, and climaxed the day with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Richard Burgin, Seymour Lipkin and having as soloist the gorgeous alto Florence Kopleff. I went to this concert particularly to hear Miss Kopleff sing the divine solo for alto in Mahler's Third Symphony and the equally taxing and rewarding "Alto Rhapsody" by Brahms. Miss Kopleff was in her usual fine voice as she poured out tones so luscious that they seemed to haunt the ear moments after their conclusion.

The male chorus in the Rhapsody did not seem in its best estate but Mr. Lipkin held everything together and the work proceeded its gorgeous way in a thoroughly musical manner. Equally affecting was her singing of the Mahler excerpt, one of the most beautiful he ever wrote. The voice took on added warmth and suavity as she sang the word of Goethe. In fact I get everything I came to hear plus a little bit more. Who could ask for more?

The audience made its pleasure known in a vociferous manner, calling Miss Kopleff back several times to acknowledge applause well merited and fully appreciated. The two arias might have been written particularly for her.

Of the symphony itself it is difficult to speak with authority after a first listening. Like much of Mahler's writing it becomes involved, repetitive, and always without seeming to reach a climax. Although undoubtedly students of this composer find within its pages much to satisfy them, Mr. Burgin was in top form, drew superb climaxes from his players and breathed life into what otherwise might have been something less than vital.

Only 2545 in Audience

The audience Thursday was numerically small, only 2545, so one wonders if the Berkshire Music Center really made any money. At least it had a chance to show what it has been doing. It is difficult to understand why the attendance was not larger because the day was fair, the evening cool and glorious. In past years I have written much of the activities of this school and nothing I heard Thursday has changed my mind about its great cultural contribution.

When more than 400 students from many lands can get together and speak the same musical language for eight weeks, something is bound to happen. A greater feeling of belonging and a mutual understanding can only result in a finer spiritual and political atmosphere. This, then, is one of the principal contributions of the Berkshire Music Center, founded by Serge Koussevitsky 23 years ago and carried on by his successor, Charles Munch, with the same single purpose and devotion which Koussevitsky brought to it.

There is little to say about the individual performances I heard. Of course the avant garde in composition were as avant as they could possibly be and scored the semblance of a melody. The choruses which had been working under Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Lona Cooke Devaron sang works which they will probably never sing again under conductors who may never conduct again.

One of Finest Orchestras

The student orchestra this year has been one of the finest in the history of the school. Its conductors have taken on the characteristics of Charles Munch so there are no baton acrobatics and they seem to do very well. A short concert by the chamber music department brought me my first hearing of "Toccata for Percussion Instruments" by Chavez, a work of amazing beauty considering the limitations of its scoring. Everyone seemed impressed by it. Technically it went off with elan.

Today Mr. Monteux takes over for his fourth assignment, offering a program which includes Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, "Mathis Der Maler" by Hindemith and the Brahms First Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 24 1962

Music: Annual Gala Is Held At Berkshire Center

By RAYMOND MORIN
Worcester Telegram Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD LENOX — The Berkshire Music Center celebrated its annual gala evening last night with events identifying it as one of the world's great schools of music.

An audience of 2,545 had assembled by 8 o'clock, when the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra climaxed activities with a superlatively played concert in the Music Shed, conducted by Richard Burgin and Seymour Lipkin of the school's orchestra faculty.

Florence Kopleff was soloist in Brahms' Rhapsody for Alto, Menis Chorus and Orchestra, Opus 53, and four movements from Mahler' Symphony in D minor for orchestra with women's chorus. Men of the Festival Chorus were prepared by Hugh Ross and women by Alfred Nash Patterson.

Burgin conducted the 104 students in a gripping performance of Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration." The somber mood at the beginning was portrayed with clarity and remark- Woodwind solos were accurate and able poise. Woodwind solos were accurate and expressive — so was that of the concertmaster, Won-Mo-Kim.

Poignant Performance

The tone poem's big moments were dramatic, grandiose in volume and beautifully disciplined to the baton. Horns had vitality and excellent intonation.

Burgin made no curtailment in speeds or continuity. The huge choral masses of the "Transfiguration" verses had magnitude. The brasses were nothing less than magnificent.

Unlike many recitals of the Brahms Alto Rhapsody, Miss Kopleff made her audience eminently aware of Goethe's words. Her big voice was projected with sensitivity and consummate ease. There was fullness in her low tones.

It was a poignant performance without lamentation over text or musical setting. Lipkin's requests for shading were granted by the 35 men, who sang with steady tone, balanced to instruments and solo voice.

Percussion Displayed

Three exhibitions were given during the afternoon by students of the center's chamber music composition and choral departments. These were held in the theater concert hall and main house porch.

Much music was performed that belongs to the "labor of love" school of experimentation. It is reasonable to assume that all was sincere, some bore the badge of merit and some was rot.

The chamber music department offered one of the most exciting works of the entire summer — Chavez' "Toccata for Percussion Instruments," played by six students and conducted by Louis Forner. It required use of all the noisemakers. The only substitutions were two bongo drums in place of the Mexican composer's native instruments.

Mozart by String Octet

Complex, irresistible rhythms were patterned between and among instruments. The two swift movements raised quite a storm, but here and in the slow movement was a veritable harvest of ingenious sounds, even containing illusions of melody. The teamwork and direction were marvellous.

The final movement of Mozart's Serenade for Strings, received a highly enthused performance by an octet. Speed was driven, but quality was delightful.

Least "professional" performance was Beethoven's cello-piano sonata in G minor, Opus 5, No. 2, played by William Brent and Sumiko Kohno. There were generous indications of sound technique and neat phrasing, but Miss Kohno's heavy - handed treatment of the piano score unbalanced her companion's tone.

New Compositions

One needs powers of clairvoyance to write hopefully of the composition department's products. A string quartet did a thing by Larry Stempel of New York City called "In Memoriam Dag Hammerskjold." It lent suspicion that each of the four instruments was playing a pleasing melody in its respective key. The piece ended in a harangue of scratched, plucked and struck strings.

A fiercely dedicated young composer from Montclair, N.J., performed his "Piano Studies." He skirmished about the keyboard in a desolating number of keys — very moody, in the style of an unharnessed toccata.

David Johnson from Rochester, N.Y., gave diligent care to three brief pieces for flute alone. He played well, achieving nice contrasts with occasional spatters of tartness — all requiring good technique and imagination.

Tonight's Program

"Images, in Memoriam James Agee" required some verses to be narrated by Geoffrey Lewis and mysteriously illustrated by a chamber group of 12 players. Composer Peter Lewis of Bradford, R.I., conducted.

The Tanglewood Choir of 36 mixed voices was directed by Patterson, new conductor of the Worcester Festival Chorus, and Lorna Cooke De Varon. Repertory included works by Daniel Pinkham, Purcell, Vecchi, Musorgski and Brahms.

Tonight, Pierre Monteux conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival's final weekend. The program is Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and Brahms' First Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
AUG 27 1962

Berkshire Music Center Ends 20th Season

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, completes its Twentieth Session tomorrow (Sunday, August 26), and today made announcement of cash awards presented to distinguished students. This summer 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries.

Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prizes were won by Louis Angelini, (1303 Bleeker Street) Utica, New York and Volkmar Fritsche, Essex, West Germany. These prizes are based on the best compositions of the summer by a student of the Composition Department, and are made available by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Mr. Fritsche studied under Iain Hamilton, and Mr. Angelini was a student of Witold Lutoslawski.

The Gregor Piatigorsky Prize, awarded to a student cellist of extraordinary merit, was presented to Raphael Sommer of Israel.

Norman M. Dinnerstein (19 Grosvenor Street), Springfield, Massachusetts, also a student of Mr. Lutoslawski, and Phillip C. Rhodes, Forest City, North Carolina, who studied with Mr. Hamilton, divided the Raphael Sagalyn Award for the best orchestral work by students in the Composition Department.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea was the recipient of the Albert Spaulding Prize as the most promising and outstanding instrumentalist in the Music Center's student body. The prize is the income from a fund established by Mrs. Spaulding. Mr. Kim was Concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer.

The Samuel Wechsler Commission for a present or former composition student was awarded to Robert Newell of Berwick, Illinois. Mr. Newell was enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center this summer and studied under Lukas Foss.

The Leonard Bernstein Award, a new award this year, established by Mr. Bernstein who is a former student and faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center, was won by Louis Forner (101 Alma Street) Palo Alto, California. The Award is made at the discretion of the director of the Berkshire Music Center, Charles Munch. Mr. Forner was one of three active conducting students.

Earlier in the session several tuition scholarship grants were made to some of the more outstanding students in the Music Center. Jean-Jacques Barbieux received the Gertrude Robinson Smith Scholarship. Mr. Barbieux from Bruxelles, Belgium was a student in the orchestral conducting class.

The Selly A. Eismann Memorial Scholarship went to William Brent (2651 Calvert), Detroit, Michigan, a cellist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

David H. Carroll (47 Surrey Circle), Tonawanda, New York was the recipient of the Carlotta Dreyfus Scholarship. Mr. Carroll was a bassoonist in the student orchestra.

Frank D. Reilly, a violinist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, received the Lydia Watson Hersloff Scholarship. He is a resident of (98 Gainsboro Street) Boston, Massachusetts.

The High Fidelity Magazine Scholarship was won by Christine Berl, a pianist, of (250 West 58th Street) New York City.

The Arthur Abell Memorial Scholarship was presented to Marjorie Ann Bacher, a violinist in the student orchestra. She is from (619 16th Street) Greeley, Colorado.

The 1963 session of the Berkshire Music Center, to run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, will open for an eight week period on June 30, 1963.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 24 1962

Music Review

BMC Students Perform

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE ANNUAL "Gala Evening" at Tanglewood of the Berkshire Music Center yesterday enlisted the participation of every component of the school, both students and faculty. In close-order sequence the various departments of the school paraded their talents and accomplishments before goodly audiences on all parts of the estate, both within the Theater and the Shed, and on the lawns adjacent to the administration building.

The chamber music department presented a program ranging from the Beethoven G minor, Opus 5, No. 2 played by cellist William Brent and pianist Sumiko Kohno, through the Mozart wind octet in C minor, and the Mendelssohn string octet to a remarkable Toccata for six percussion instruments of Chavez.

* * *

THE COMPOSITION department allowed an interested audience to hear works of six of the students in that field played by the Fromm Fellowship Players and also seven Berkshire Music Center instrumentalists.

After an interim planned to allow the audiences time for the picnic lunches they may have brought, the Tanglewood choir gave a long program in which the faculty choral teachers, Hugh Ross, Lorna Cooke de Varon and Alfred Nash Patterson, with student choral conductors Maurice Casey, Bernard de Surcy and Stuart Raleigh gave music from Purcell to Daniel Pinkham.

* * *

THE MUSIC CENTER orchestra occupied the Shed stage for the final acts of the Parade with a most mature assignment of Richard Strauss, Brahms and Mahler in which Richard Burgin, head of the conducting class led, the Strauss and Mahler and, Seymour Lipkin, his assistant, the Brahms Rhapsody for alto, men's chorus and orchestra. Florence Kopleff, who is also to take part in Sunday's Beethoven ninth symphony was the alto soloist in the Brahms and the Mahler excerpts in which the power and majesty of her voice added immeasurably to the performances.

The excellence of the orchestra's contribution is a tribute to the grade of students the Center attracts and, as well, the capacity of the faculty conductors to shape and weld the comparatively inexperienced young musicians so quickly to such a high degree of competence. This was music-making with more than mere accurate perusal. The sections were decidedly adequate and such boons as fell to the lot of the concertmaster, violinist Won-Mo-Kim, in the Strauss tone-poem were executed with outstanding excellence.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
AUG 24 1962

2,545 Shiver At Tanglewood Benefit Night

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Another chilly night plagued Tanglewood but 2,545 came for the Gala Evening staged by various groups of the Berkshire Music Center, for the benefit of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky headed the distinguished committee.

The festivities opened at 4 p.m. in the Theatre-Concert Hall with chamber music performed by groups of two, six and eight students, presenting standard works of Beethoven, Mozart and Mendelssohn, and a challenging, exciting Toccata for Percussion Instruments by Chavez.

The department of composition followed at 5 with works by six young Tanglewood composers, in some cases performed or conducted by the creators of the music. Instrumental ensembles were provided by members of the Fromm Fellowship Players, assisted by seven students.

The Tanglewood Choir gave a concert on the porch of the main house at 7. The interesting works ranged from very old to very new. The numbers had been prepared by Hugh Ross, Lorna Cooke de Varón and Alfred Nash Patterson. The latter is to conduct the Worcester Festival Chorus in October.

Student Orchestra

The student orchestra of 100 players, assisted by the Festival Chorus and Florence Kopleff, alto, gave a glowing account of itself in the Music Shed in the evening. The length of the program emphasized the degree of patience and skill involved in the preparation of what may well be the finest student concert ever heard here. The one drawback seemed to be a parallelism between some of the musical numbers.

Richard Burgin conducted Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," with such cooperation that one could close one's eyes and find it impossible to think that this was a student orchestra. The episodes of suffering, fond memories and ecstatic glimpsing of the eternal future, were painted with well-considered and poised variety.

Beautiful Solos

Seymour Lipkin of the faculty conducted the Brahms Alto Rhapsody, with extended solos voiced beautifully by Miss Kopleff and mellow singing by thirty men. Miss Kopleff sang throughout the evening without a score. In one movement from the Mahler Third Symphony, under Burgin's direction, Miss Kopleff was heard again, and 40 women provided a chorus, with bright bell-like accompaniments. This seemed to be a repetition, though lovely, of the Brahms, and the long quiet stretches of the Mahler had flashbacks to the Strauss, though the climaxes were individual and tremendous. Some "exposed" passages in the Mahler brought for the first time student naivete, but also there were moments when the young players reached new heights. Of the four movements presented, the last one set a record of some sort, revealing how a work can be supremely beautiful in the course of circling forever before reaching a conclusion.

183

184

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Monday, July 23, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,197

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050

JUL 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

JUL 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158

JUL 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
NEW MILFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4030

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUL 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

JUL 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,192

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
BROOKFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,130

JUL 19 1962

MEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
D. 7,197

JUL 19 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

JUL 18 1962

MALDEN, MASS.
NEWS
D. 10,192

JUL 19 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUL 23 1962

NEW MILFORD, CONN.
TIMES
W. 4,129

JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191
JUL 16 1962

NBC To Televise Two Programs At Tanglewood

The National Broadcasting Company's "Today" show returns to Tangelwood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the second consecutive summer to televise activities at the Orchestra Berkshire Festival. Two programs will be taped on Wednesday for broadcast on Monday, July 23, and Tuesday, July 24, to a nationwide daily audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

Fifty members of the "Today" staff will be at Tanglewood for Wednesday's taping session which will include members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, rehearsing Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5, in A major, K. 219 with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Charles Munch and members of the Boston Symphony will also perform the Symphony in D major, No. 31, "Paris", K. 297 by Mozart. Other music to be heard will be performed by a woodwind quintet consisting of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon, the principal woodwind players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school of music, will be represented by two demonstration classes. William Kroll, co-head of the Center's Chamber Music Division, will conduct a string quartet class, and Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony, will direct a class of brass players.

Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, will be host for the two Tanglewood programs, replacing John Chancellor who is on vacation. With him will be Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine, who with Mr. Vanocur, will conduct interviews with Governor John Volpe of Massachusetts and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ITHACA JOURNAL
Saturday, July 21, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

LONG ISLAND DAILY PRESS
Sunday, July 22, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 22 1962

WORLD TELEGRAM
NEW YORK, N.Y.

JUL 19 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUL 19 1962

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
D: 117,299

JUL 21 1962

AUSTIN, MINN.
HERALD
D: 13,582

JUL 20 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUL 19 1962

AUSTIN, MINN.
HERALD
D: 13,582

JUL 20 1962

ALHAMBRA, CALIF.
POST-ADVOCATE
D. 12,872

JUL 21 1962

NEWARK STAR-LEDGER
NEWARK, N. J.

JUL 22 1962

SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
D. 56,114

JUL 21 1962

SCRANTON, PA.
TRIBUNE
D. 35,769

JUL 21 1962

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 393,595 S. 369,907

JUL 22 1962

ASHTABULA, OHIO
STAR-BEACON
D. 17,355 S. 17,405

JUL 22 1962

Boston's orchestra on 'Today'

A performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Charles Munch, will be one of the programming highlights when NBC-TV's "today" show originates from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Monday and Tuesday.

NBC News White House correspondent Sander Vanocur who will substitue for vacationing "Today" host John Chancellor next week — and Jack Lescoulie and "Today Girl" Pat Fontaine were at Tanglewood last Wednesday to tape the two programs.

Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony, "today" will also visit a rehearsal of the orchestra. Other features will include a behind-the-scenes look at the summer school of music and performances by several student musical groups, including string, brass and woodwind ensembles.

There will also be features on the Berkshire area, including films of some of its tourist attractions, interviews with some of the noted people vacationing there and a display of authentic furniture from Shaker Village.

This will be the second year that "Today" has broadcast from the Berkshire Festival. Last August "Today" presented portions of the program from Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 9 1962

Tanglewood, BSO To Be On 'Today' Show

Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured over the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show July 23 and 24, according to John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference.

He said that arrangements for televising from the Berkshire Music Festival were made at a meeting Saturday at Tanglewood.

Heading the television network group at the meeting was Donald Silverman, a unit manager for the Today show. Mr. Silverman is a cousin of Atty. Albert S. Silverman of Pittsfield. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager and James Brosnahan, treasurer of the BSO, also were among those present.

Mr. Geary said that arrangements for the televised program were made by the BSO in cooperation with the Berkshire Hills Conference and the Massachusetts Department of Commerce.

35-Man Crew

The conference executive said that a 35-man crew from the Today show will arrive July 19 and will tape several Tanglewood performances July 20 for showing on the program July 23 and 24. The program runs from 7 to 9 a.m. Mondays through Fridays.

This will be the second consecutive year that Today has broadcast from the Berkshires. Last year the show was on live for two days — the first from Tanglewood and the second from Music Barn.

Last year's Tanglewood program on Today included several interviews and concerts by small groups. Mr. Geary said that the schedule this year includes coverage of a rehearsal and concert by the full orchestra.

TODAY SHOW

135

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

Whitestone

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, violinist, will appear as soloist tomorrow with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the filming of the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" TV show at Tanglewood. The tape will be used on the "Today" show Monday and Tuesday along with other events at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Silverstein also will be the soloist with the BSO at Friday night's concert in the Music Shed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUL 22 1962

NBC-TV's Today to Visit Tanglewood

On tomorrow and Tuesday mornings, viewers of NBC's early hours show, Today, will be able to sample some culture painlessly and enjoyably. Today's cameras will focus on the Boston Symphony's Summer home at Tanglewood in the picturesque Berkshires.

Fifty members of Today's staff already have taped the two programs. The programs will show Charles Munch and the orchestra rehearing Mozart's "Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major," with Joseph Silverstein, who will be the orchestra's concert master next season, as soloist.

Other music to be heard will be performed by a woodwind quintet comprising flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, oboist Ralph Gomberg, clarinetist Gino Cioffi, horn player James Stagliano, and bassoonist Sherman Walt—all first desk players in the orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's Summer school, will be represented by two demonstration classes, with William Kroll conducting a string quartet class and Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the orchestra, directing a class of brass players.

Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, will be host for the two Tanglewood programs, replacing John Chancellor, who is on vacation. With him will be Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine, who, with Mr. Vanocur, will conduct interviews with Governor John Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 18 1962

Tanglewood Being Televised by NBC

Activities around Tanglewood are being teletaped today by the National Broadcasting Company, which will broadcast them Monday and Tuesday on its 7 to 9 a.m. morning show, "Today."

The program will be part of a "Today" series devoted to Massachusetts' recreational facilities.

NBC's Sander Vanocur, "Today" host, and Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine will interview Governor John A. Volpe and Thoms Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, at Tanglewood.

Dr. Charles Munch conducting the BSO will be taped for showing Monday.

A fashion show at Tanglewood this morning, with stage pieces from Shaker Village, Hancock, has also been scheduled for broad-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 11 1962

Tanglewood to Go on 'Today' Show

LENOX—Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured over the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show July 23 and 24, according to John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference.

He said that arrangements for televising from the Berkshire Music Festival were made at a meeting at Tanglewood.

The conference executive said that a 35-man crew from the Today show will arrive July 19 and will tape several Tanglewood performances July 20 for showing on the program July 23 and 24. The program runs from 7 to 9 a.m. Mondays through Fridays.

This will be the second consecutive year that Today has broadcast from the Berkshires. Last year the show was on live for two days—the first from Tanglewood and the second from Music Barn.

DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES-HERALD
D. 191,375 S. 198,150
JUL 20 1962 Byfield

SUNDAY BULLETIN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JUL 22 1962

EVENING NEWS
PATERSON, N. J.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JUL 22 1962

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 212,220 S. 282,962
JUL 23 1962 Byfield

The Today Show will originate from the Berkshire Music Festival, at Tanglewood, tomorrow and Tuesday, Ch 4 from 7 to 9 a.m. A performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be highlighted. "Today" will also visit a rehearsal of the orchestra. Other features will include a behind-the-scenes look at the Summer school of music and performances by several student musical groups, films of tourist attractions, interviews with noted people vacationing there and a display of authentic furniture from Shaker Village.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

NBC Staff Arriving For TV Show

TANGLEWOOD — National Broadcasting Co. technicians and staff started moving into Tanglewood this afternoon to make preparations to tape all day Wednesday a series of activities for the television show Today, which will be carried on a nationwide network Monday and Tuesday mornings from 7 to 9.

Don Silverman, producer of the Today show arrived at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge Monday night and later today Sander Vanocur, NPC's White House correspondent, who will be host for the TV show, will arrive with Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine who will conduct interviews with Governor John A. Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, on Wednesday.

A fashion show will be staged in the formal Tanglewood gardens Wednesday morning with six New York models. Pieces of Shaker furniture from the Hancock Shaker Village will be used in the filming of the fashion show.

Shortly before noon on Wednesday the NBC crew will tape the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Charles Munch conducting. This will be shown on the Today show Monday.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 127,955 S. 188,329
JUL 22 1962 Byfield

* * *

SANDER VANOCUR, White House correspondent for NBC News, will be the substitute host on "Today" this week while John Chancellor is on vacation. He will be followed by Ray Scherer, July 30-Aug. 3, and Edwin Newman, Aug. 6-10.

"Today," broadcast weekdays at 7 a.m. on Channel 5, will visit the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lennox, Mass., tomorrow and Tuesday. A performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be among the features.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Radio Daily - Television Daily (m)
Commercial Radio
Circ. 10,043
JUL 23 1962

7 Arts' 'Symphony' Tuned-In by 'Today'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured in two special two-hour programs on NBC's "Today" show today and tomorrow, it was announced by Robert Rich, VP - general sales manager of Seven Arts Associated. The programs were produced at the Tanglewood Music Festival in Massachusetts.

They feature a portion of the rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony, as well as interviews with various musicians at the festival, Boston Symphony officials, classes in chamber music at the Berkshire Music Center and a greeting from Gov. Volpe of Massachusetts. Sander Vanocur, NBC White House correspondent, hosts the two Tanglewood programs, replacing John Chancellor, who is on vacation.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is featured in a series of 13 one-hour TV Concert Specials being distributed by Seven Arts Associated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

NBC To Film Tanglewood On Wednesday

A crew from the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show will be at Tanglewood Wednesday instead of Friday, as originally scheduled, to film a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, said he was informed yesterday of the advance in the schedule.

Mr. Geary said he was told that the change was necessitated because NBC will need the technicians later in the week at Andover, Maine, to prepare for an international television broadcast July 23 via the Telstar satellite.

The conference executive said that the "Today" show will run the Tanglewood films as scheduled July 23 and 24.

TODAY SHOW

135 P 6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

Whitestone

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, violinist, will appear as soloist tomorrow with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the filming of the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" TV show at Tanglewood. The tape will be used on the "Today" show Monday and Tuesday along with other events at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Silverstein also will be the soloist with the BSO at Friday night's concert in the Music Shed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 1[illegible] 1962

Tanglewood Being Televised by NBC

Activities around Tanglewood are being teletaped today by the National Broadcasting Company, which will broadcast them Monday and Tuesday on its 7 to 9 a.m. morning show, "Today."

The program will be part of a "Today" series devoted to Massachusetts' recreational facilities.

NBC's Sander Vanocur, "Today" host, and Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine will interview Governor John A. Volpe and Thoms Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, at Tanglewood.

Dr. Charles Munch conducting the BSO will be taped for showing Monday.

A fashion show at Tanglewood this morning, with stage pieces from Shaker Village, Hancock, has also been s heduled for broad-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 17 1962

NBC Staff Arriving For TV Show

TANGLEWOOD — National Broadcasting Co. technicians and staff started moving into Tanglewood this afternoon to make preparations to tape all day Wednesday a series of activities for the television show Today, which will be carried on a nationwide network Monday and Tuesday mornings from 7 to 9.

Don Silverman, producer of the Today show arrived at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge Monday night and later today Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, who will be host for the TV show, will arrive with Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine who will conduct interviews with Governor John A. Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, on Wednesday.

A fashion show will be staged in the formal Tanglewood gardens Wednesday morning with six New York models. Pieces of Shaker furniture from the Hancock Shaker Village will be used in the filming of the fashion show.

Shortly before noon on Wednesday the NBC crew will tape the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Charles Munch conducting. This will be shown on the Today show Monday.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 127,955 S. 188,329
JUL 22 1962

SANDER VANOCUR, White House correspondent for NBC News, will be the substitute host on "Today" this week while John Chancellor is on vacation. He will be followed by Ray Scherer, July 30-Aug. 3, and Edwin Newman, Aug. 6-10.

"Today," broadcast weekdays at 7 a.m. on Channel 5, will visit the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lennox, Mass., tomorrow and Tuesday. A performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be among the features.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Radio Daily - Television Daily (m)
Commercial Radio
Circ. 10,043
JUL 23 1962

7 Arts' 'Symphony' Tuned-In by 'Today'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured in two special two-hour programs on NBC's "Today" show today and tomorrow, it was announced by Robert Rich, VP - general sales manager of Seven Arts Associated. The programs were produced at the Tanglewood Music Festival in Massachusetts.

They feature a portion of the rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony, as well as interviews with various musicians at the festival, Boston Symphony officials, classes in chamber music at the Berkshire Music Center and a greeting from Gov. Volpe of Massachusetts. Sander Vanocur, NBC White House correspondent, hosts the two Tanglewood programs, replacing John Chancellor, who is on vacation.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is featured in a series of 13 one-hour TV Concert Specials being distributed by Seven Arts Associated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 11 1962

Tanglewood to Go on 'Today' Show

LENOX—Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured over the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show July 23 and 24, according to John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference.

He said that arrangements for televising from the Berkshire Music Festival were made at a meeting at Tanglewood.

The conference executive said that a 35-man crew from the Today show will arrive July 19 and will tape several Tanglewood performances July 20 for showing on the program July 23 and 24. The program runs from 7 to 9 a.m. Mondays through Fridays.

This will be the second consecutive year that Today has broadcast from the Berkshires. Last year the show was on live for two days—the first from Tanglewood and the second from Music Barn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUL 22 1962

NBC-TV's Today to Visit Tanglewood

On tomorrow and Tuesday mornings, viewers of NBC's early hours show, Today, will be able to sample some culture painlessly and enjoyably. Today's cameras will focus on the Boston Symphony's Summer home at Tanglewood in the picturesque Berkshires.

Fifty members of Today's staff already have taped the two programs. The programs will show Charles Munch and the orchestra rehearing Mozart's "Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major," with Joseph Silverstein, who will be the orchestra's concert master next season, as soloist.

Other music to be heard will be performed by a woodwind quintet comprising flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, oboist Ralph Gomberg, clarinetist Gino Cioffi, horn player James Stagliano, and bassoonist Sherman Walt—all first desk players in the orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's Summer school, will be represented by two demonstration classes, with William Kroll conducting a string quartet class and Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the orchestra, directing a class of brass players.

Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, will be host for the two Tanglewood programs, replacing John Chancellor, who is on vacation. With him will be Jack Lescoulie and Miss Pat Fontaine, who, with Mr. Vanocur, will conduct interviews with Governor John Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES-HERALD
D. 181,375 S. 196,150
JUL 20 1962
SUNDAY BULLETIN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JUL 22 1962
EVENING NEWS
PATERSON, N. J.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JUL 22 1962

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 212,220 S. 282,962
JUL 23 1962

The Today Show will originate from the Berkshire Music Festival, at Tanglewood, tomorrow and Tuesday, Ch 4 from 7 to 9 a.m. A performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be highlighted. "Today" will also visit a rehearsal of the orchestra. Other features will include a behind-the-scenes look at the Summer school of music and performances by several student musical groups, films of tourist attractions, interviews with noted people vacationing there and a display of authentic furniture from Shaker Village.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

NBC To Film Tanglewood On Wednesday

A crew from the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show will be at Tanglewood Wednesday instead of Friday, as originally scheduled, to film a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, said he was informed yesterday of the advance in the schedule.

Mr. Geary said he was told that the change was necessitated because NBC will need the technicians later in the week at Andover, Maine, to prepare for an international television broadcast July 23 via the Telstar satellite.

The conference executive said that the "Today" show will run the Tanglewood films as scheduled July 23 and 24.

186

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 16 1962

'Today' Program

Vanocur To Host TV Show At Festival Featuring BSO

TANGLEWOOD — When the National Broadcasting Company tapes its Today television show here Wednesday for its estimated 6 million viewers to see on the nationwide telecast between 7 and 9 Monday and Tuesday mornings, Sander Vanocur, NBC White House correspondent, will be host for the programs.

Mr. Vanocur is replacing John Chancellor, host for the Today show, who is on vacation. Frank Blair, newscaster on the program, who was here last year when the program was carried from Tanglewood, also is on vacation.

Jack Lescoulie Coming

With Mr. Vanocur will be Jack Lescoulie, veteran NBC newsman, who covers many sports and travelogue events for NBC and who, at one time, conducted the Tonight show from New York. Also coming here for the program will be Miss Pat Fontaine, who, with Mr. Lescoulie, will conduct interviews with Gov. John Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Donald Silverman, unit manager for the Today show, who is a cousin of Atty. Albert S. Silverman of Pittsfield, said today the NBC crew of 35 and staff will arrive tomorrow at the Red Lion Inn and Heaton Hall in Stockbridge to start making preparations to tape the show beginning at 6 a.m. on Wednesday.

During the course of the visit of the Today show to Tanglewood the grounds will be closed with the exception of the guided tours.

Programs on Tape

Two programs will be taped, both including members of the BSO, with Charles Munch conducting. One will be of the orchestra rehearsing Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Dr. Munch and members of the orchestra also will perform the Symphony in D Major, No. 31, "Paris," by Mozart.

Other music to be heard will be performed by a woodwind quintet consisting of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn; and Sherman Walt, bassoon, the principal players of the BSO.

The Today show also will film two demonstration classes of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music conducted here by the BSO.

Kroll To Conduct

William Kroll, cochairman of the BMC chamber music division, will conduct a string quartet class, and Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the BSO, will direct a class of brass players.

Two writers for the Today program, John Lord and Charles Horner, arrived here over the weekend to start writing the script for the show. Assisting them is Harry Beall and his press staff at Tanglewood, along with John Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, and Lawrence Flynn of the Massachusetts Department of Commerce.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

NBC To Film Tanglewood On Wednesday

A crew from the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show will be at Tanglewood Wednesday instead of Friday, as originally scheduled, to film a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, said he was informed yesterday of the advance in the schedule.

Mr. Geary said he was told that the change was necessitated because NBC will need the technicians later in the week at Andover, Maine, to prepare for an international television broadcast July 23 via the Telstar satellite.

The conference executive said that the "Today" show will run the Tanglewood films as scheduled July 23 and 24.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
D. 26,063
JUL 24 1962

Tanglewood Is Host To National TV Amid Its Music And Casual Clientele

For these past two mornings, the National Broadcasting Company's "Today" show has given its spotlight to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Recorded on video tape last week by NBC's mobile laboratory, the program featured everything from a dress rehearsal of the Boston Symphony to a fashion show of fall wear by five lovelies in the bushes of the formal gardens.

We enjoyed the whole thing though we had never before heard a commercial between movements of a symphony. New experience. We understand that Jack Lescoulie also had a good time. In between appearances, he was found practicing his golf swing on the Tanglewood terraces for his scheduled match Thursday with an old friend, Sam Snead. Sammy had just returned from the British Open.

"Big Advertising Day"

Roger Tourreau, Conductor Charles Munch's chauffeur and valet, amply summed up NBC's whirlwind visit when he called for his boss on Wednesday. "Big advertising day," today," said Roger.

We did find the fashion show, however, faintly amusing, for Lenox now is no mecca for the fashionable.

According to the oldtimers, an evening at Tanglewood years ago was quite a respectable affair. Concert-goers in those days trudged through the mud to listen to the USO in full evening dress. Gentlemen wore suits and even ties, while the ladies dressed as if it were a ball.

But today little Lenox is readily accessible to thousands of culture seekers. They come in all shapes and sizes, wearing everything imaginable and less, and what they lack in dress they often try to cover with make-up.

The Garb

The Mozart concerts this weekend were a case in point. Saturday evening's program was a typical evening affair. To a background of two symphonys and a piano concerto featuring pianist Evelyne Crochet, the 6,700 people sat and strolled in sweat shirts, sport jackets, sandals, dungarees, chinos, loud shirts, Bermuda shorts, blankets slung over the shoulder Apache style, etc. This was inside the shed. Outside on the lawns, everything was black except for a dazzling pair of yellow toreador pants under one tree. These Riverside Park-type costumes were not universal, however, but were almost a majority and even invaded the box seats.

Sunday afternoon's performance was a very special one. The major part of the program was Mozart's Requiem Mass in D Minor dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Dr. Munch's predecessor and first director of the BSO. During the 30-second silent tribute to Koussevitzky we noted that the amusement park atmosphere had changed overnight and the sunny lawns now looked like a beach.

More Garb

Bathing suits at Tanglewood are verboten, but the ban on Bermuda shorts, short shorts, T shirts, no shirts, leotards, and bikini - type midriff exposers has long been dropped in despair. Admittedly, some of the sun worshippers did look attractive, but as everywhere there were some aging women who should have been told the truth.

From the Brooklyn and Charlestown fans the norm was a pastel yellow or blue kerchief, bleached blonde or shoeshine black hair, huge amounts of gunk from the crowsfeet to the neck, a tight yellow or orange print sweater or pirate style swash, irridescent pants, and bare feet with ghastly red toenails. The eye-shadow was green, girls.

Hikers And Tipplers

One pair of matrons even came prepared in home-made hats - napkins pasted to their hair to ward off the sun. A hiker and troupe came into the shed with beard and knapsack. Off to the side a group of tipplers cheered the concert on with martinis in thermos bottles.

Therefore, the models sashaying through the bushes on "Today" seemed to us to make a mockery of what is a very sore spot for the administration at Tanglewood.

And, as if to climax the intrusion of the modern, Dr. Munch was forced to stop in the midst of the Requiem, for the music was being drowned out by a jet overhead.

—By BURT ALIMANSKY

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434
JUL 26 1962

CURTAIN CALL

- Boston Symphony Harassed
- TV as Vast Wasteland Disputed
- Finnish Music Gorgeous Program

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES: Music lovers who have long wished to hear and see the Boston Symphony again during its Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Mass., were rewarded when the famous orchestra held the TV spotlight intermittently early in the week. Interesting performances by members of the orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch provided intriguing highlights.

They appeared under the auspices of NBC-TV on the "Today" program. This musical feature began at 7 o'clock in the morning, which is an early hour even for western listeners, but was interrupted time and again by spots of news as well as advertising, which seemed to occupy more than a reasonable amount of time.

Playing of the Boston Symphony on the air was delightful during Mozart's "Paris" Symphony and the Fifth Violin concerto. But as a concert, much as it was appreciated, it left a good deal to be desired. Some of these shortcomings, considering the excellency of the music, could be excused.

A similar rehearsal concert was presented last year and its current repetition is greatly welcomed now. In fact, the orchestra would attain a greater national audience if its musical riches were to be made available also during the winter season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 18 1962

'Today' at Lenox Today, Taping for Broadcast

The National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show was put on video tape at Tanglewood this morning for the regular Tuesday nationwide program and this afternoon another show was filmed in the Music Shed for the "Today" program on Monday.

That may appear to be a bit confusing, but so was the scene at Tanglewood this morning at 8 when rehearsals started for the two-day program which was put together today.

Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, Jack Lescoulie, well-known TV and radio sportscaster and announcer and Miss Pat Fontaine of the "Today" cast, were hosts for the program which will be viewed Monday and Tuesday morning between 7 and 9 for an estimated six million viewers across the country.

Rain Holds Off

An overcast sky and a heavy fog from Stockbridge Bowl greeted the TV group as they started arriving on the Tanglewood grounds around 5. Rain held off until shortly after 9 when the camera crews completed shooting the outdoor events. These included interviews by Mr. Vanocur in the formal gardens with Gov. John A. Volpe, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a fashion show, narrated by Miss Fontaine with an assist from Mr. Lescoulie.

Ross Edman, chief of education of the Hancock Shaker Community, described some of the Shaker furniture pieces brought to Tanglewood for the show, followed by a demonstration by the brass instrument class of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Roger Voisin, and a concert on the lawn by the BSO Woodwind Quintet.

Shortly after noon, the NBC staff shifted operations to the Music Shed where Jack Lescoulie opened the program, interviewing Rosario Mazzeo of the BSO. Then members of the orchestra, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, rehearsed for the TV audience a performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5 in A major. Later in the afternoon, Sander Vanocur introduced the BSO and Charles Munch, who conducted a performance of Mozart's "Paris Symphony."

During Mr. Vanocur's interview with the Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, Mr. Perry, they discussed the 76-year history of the BSO and spoke of the contributions made by the orchestra as "good will ambassadors" in tours to Europe, Russia, Australia and the Far East.

Governor Up Early

Gov. Volpe, who arrived at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox last night after a plane trip from Boston, was at Tanglewood before 8 this morning. During his interview with Mr. Vanocur, the governor spoke of the gains being made in Massachusetts to attract industries to the commonwealth. He pointed out that 14 per cent of the electronic industry in the country is now situated in Massachusetts and expressed the feeling that the industrial expansion throughout the state will continue.

At Tanglewood this morning, assisting the NBC staff in preparing the program, were, besides BSO personnel, representatives of the Berkshire Hills Conference and the Massachusetts Department of Commerce, all of whom were instrumental in making arrangements for the "Today" program to be carried from Tanglewood for the second consecutive year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
JUL 22 1962

NBC-TV's "Today Show" will feature filmed activities of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow and Tuesday mornings. The films will include the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, rehearsing Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5 in A major, K 219. The "Today Show" is seen locally at 7 a.m. on Channel 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL - 2 8 1962

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

A MORE APPROPRIATE TITLE for my column this week would be "Inside Today" since my intention is to note some of the activities of the NBC "Today" show preparations for broadcast at Tanglewood. Some forty members of the "Today" staff arrived at Tanglewood on July 17 for the following day's taping of two shows which were televised July 23 and 24 on NBC's nationwide network. Bringing a two-hour television program to a location such as Tanglewood is a vast undertaking requiring months of planning, and the behind-the-scenes operations of the "Today" crew were a fascinating sight.

As I was driving from Stockbridge Bowl to Tanglewood at 3 a.m., a trip I seldom make so early in the morning, I noticed a great white glow in the sky as Tanglewood was flooded with lights to allow the technicians to place their cables, cameras and equipment about the property. Upon driving closer I could see the area in front of the main house lighted so brilliantly that the entire operation brought to mind what I imagine Cape Canaveral to be prior to a launching. The Shed was aglow as it has been only on rare occasions so early in the morning. Here in a few hours members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were to be televised for the first time at Tanglewood.

* * *

NBC's MOBILE UNIT was parked by the main house for the first of two taping sessions. Walking in the darkness toward this large converted bus, an eerie light shone forth from the front windows, revealing the backs of several heads. On closer inspection I noticed that these heads were actually engaged in watching the late, late show, or the early, early show if you prefer, on television. From the sides of this vehicle cables snaked their way to all parts of Tanglewood's lawn. On the side of the bus was one of the most vital accoutrements of the entire operation: a large coffee urn, well patronized at all hours.

I was soon aware that "Today" people had dispersed into all corners of Tanglewood. Near the formal gardens, site of the "Today" fashion show, a voice filtered out from the darkness, ". . . and in the second hour. . ." As I walked farther along I crossed another voice explaining to some unseen individual, ". . . because the woodwind quintet will be placed about here, with the view over the lake as a background." "Today's" people, I surmised, were more clear-minded and clear-eyed than I at this point. I retired to the solitude of the Press Office, which had a sign tacked to the door, "NBC TODAY SHOW—STAFF OFFICE." "Today" was everywhere!

Don Silverman, program manager of the Today Show, his staff, along with Sander Vanocur, Jack Lescoulie, and Pat Fontaine arrived at 5 a.m. to eat breakfast at the Tanglewood cafeteria and conduct a final briefing. Silverman runs his staff with an authority which belies his young age. I had the pleasure of witnessing him in action at the important briefing at Heaton Hall the evening before. With the assurance of one who is master of the situation, he reeled off the clockwork timing which was so necessary in order to complete the taping of the two shows.

* * *

THE TAPING COMMENCED soon after 7 and continued on schedule with but one or two hitches. Two of these—one humorous, one a near disaster—involved Ian McKeown, a masterful lighting director who is known to the "Today" staff as "the pseudo-Scot." Throughout his stay at Tanglewood, Ian dashed about with a rakish straw hat brimmed in a bright red. At the critical moment when the first taping began, several of us noted that the monitor was not functioning properly. Ian happened to be the first of the television people we saw, and we brought the monitor to his attention. "Shame—Terrible shame," he replied and went on about his lighting business. In the day of the specialist the malfunctioning television monitor was not within his province.

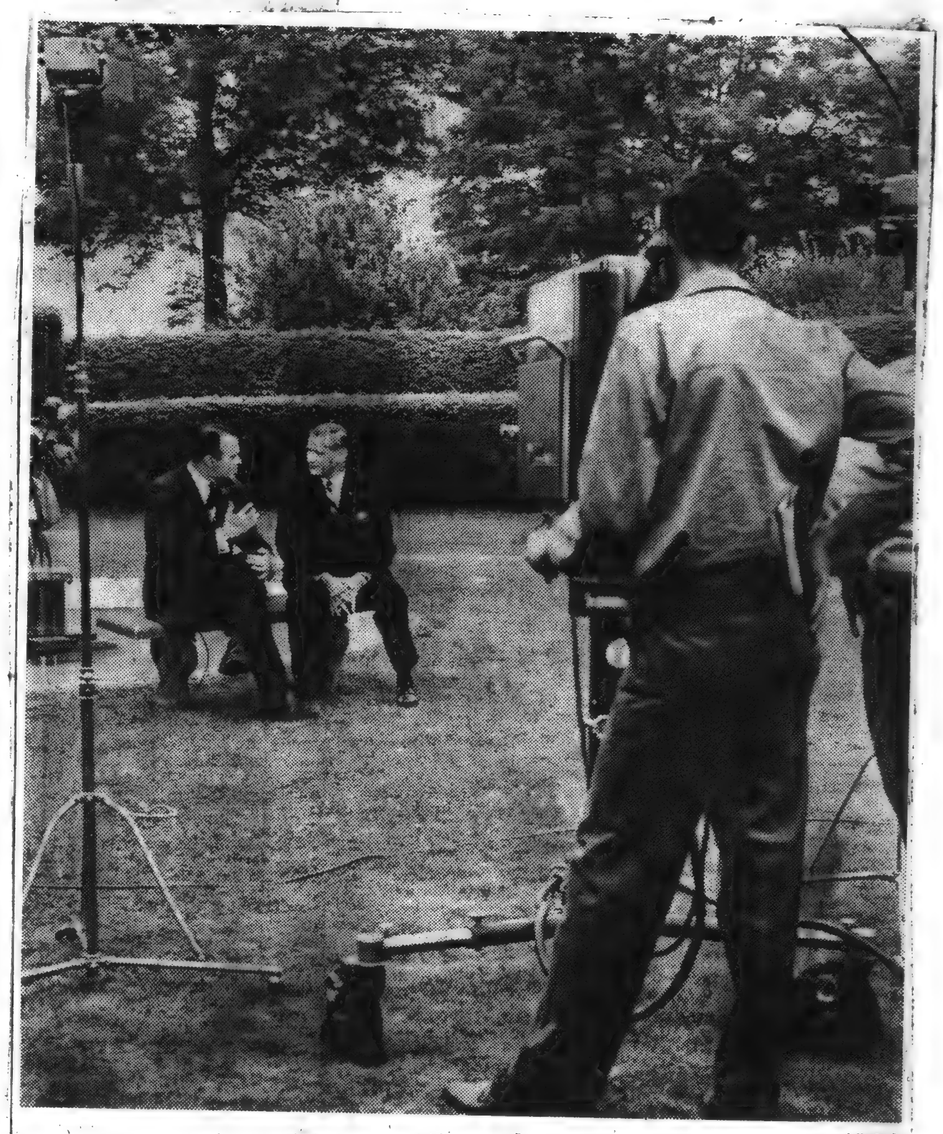
A major crisis was averted by McKeown's speed in repairing a short circuit in the cable supplying power to the lights used in the Music Shed during performances. The video tape was running, the orchestra and Joseph Silverstein were presenting a television rehearsal of Mozart's violin concerto; suddenly a sharp report, smoke, fire, and no lights! Director Jim Gaines quickly shifted his picture from the orchestra to Rosario Mazzeo, BSO personnel manager and Today's Jack Lescoulie, seated in the rear of the Shed for commentary on the music. At the loud report caused by the electrical failure, Lescoulie's "What's that?" brought a quick reply from Mazzeo, "Certainly not written by Mozart!"

* * *

WITHIN a very few minutes McKeown and his crew restored the lighting, allowing Director Gaines to return his picture to the orchestra and Doctor Munch. All breathed a genuine sigh of relief, but Ian in the words of the true professional commented, "No trouble—no trouble at all!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 18 1962



Librizzi

TODAY AT TANGLEWOOD, Gov. John A. Volpe of Massachusetts was among those who took part in the NBC television program to be carried nationwide Monday and Tuesday. The governor is being interviewed in the formal gardens by Sander Vanocur, NBC's White House correspondent, who was host for the show while John Chancellor is vacationing.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
STATE NEW YORK
SERVICE

Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, July 18, 1962

★ ★ ★

TANGLEWOOD is getting nationwide attention again this year via NBC's Today show but, unlike last summer's memorable live telecasts, these will be video taped.

A crew of 50 is putting together a pair of two-hour programs today for transmission Monday and Tuesday on Channel 6. Once again, Today's No. 1 man, John Chancellor, is among the missing. Last year, Chancellor stayed in New York while Frank Blair and Betty Clooney did the remotes. This time, Chancellor is on vacation and Sandor Vanocur, a fellow NBC News commentator, is filling in for him.

Vanocur, Jack Lescoulie and the current "Today girl," Pat Fountaine, all were scheduled to be on the spot for commentary and interviews, with Blair holding the fort in New York.

NBC hasn't said why it is taping the shows instead of airing them live. The reasons could be economic. The cost of getting a live picture out of the Western Massachusetts hills last year was estimated at $5,000. And it could be a desire to use the program's limited budget to better advantage by putting the money into musicians instead of transmission.

Last summer, Tanglewood's principal attraction, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was represented only by a string quartet. Union rules strictly apply and paying the orchestra even minimum scale was more than the early-morning show's fiscal situation could countenance.

This time, Charles Munch will conduct a rehearsal of "members of" his orchestra in two Mozart works, the exact number of "members" presumably determined by how much the budget will allow. Principal woodwind members will double as a quintet in a cameo concert and there'll be "demonstrations" by a string quartet and brass group from Tanglewood's music school.

On the talk side, there'll be interviews of Massachusetts Gov. John A. Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony.

Also planned are featurettes on the Berkshire area including films of tourist attractions, interviews of noted vacationers and a visit to Shaker Village for a display of authentic period furniture.

★ ★ ★

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D- 28,717

JUL 19 1962

Nationwide Tanglewood TV Program Monday and Tuesday

'Today' Show Will Feature BSO, School, Art, Shakers

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

Early this morning the National Broadcasting Co.'s mobile video tape "laboratory" moved out of Tanglewood bound for Rockefeller Plaza in New York with the "Today" television show, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, which will be shown to nationwide audiences Monday and Tuesday mornings over the NBC network from 7 to 9.

Last night NBC crews were still disassembling the platforms erected for camera crews in the Shed for the two-day show, as the 1,655 persons attending the Marlboro Festival Orchestra concert in the theater-concert hall were leaving the grounds.

Don Silverman, the producer, and Jim Gaines, the director, had a few anxious moments during the filming of the show. At first they seemed a little worried about the weather when they arrived at Tanglewood shortly after 4 a.m., two hours after cameramen, technicians, electricians and other crew members had started preparations for the day.

A heavy mist had settled over the valley when the cameras pointed south, hoping to pick up the view overlooking Stockbridge Bowl toward Monument Mountain. The scene was described by Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1851 as "a glen which is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods."

Rain Threatens

The sky was overcast, and with rain threatening to force many changes in the schedule of the morning, the NBC staff went ahead with the original plans and got through the outdoor schedule at 9:10, five minutes before rain started pouring down over the Tanglewood grounds.

The tension was broken at times when a member of the staff would run toward the producer and ask: "Did you hear Jack Lescoulie say 'this is January 18, 1962, in that opening?'" or later on whisper to another staffer that "Jack just said before bringing Frank Blair in for news, 'We are here today bringing you the "Today" show from Tanglewood, New Jersey.'?"

Whether these slip-ups actually occurred, it was not easy to judge from the apparent confusion at times, but there were so many "openings" for the various parts of the country, tuned for different time zones, Berkshire County, Tanglewood and Massachusetts were mentioned so often, there is no danger that viewers will not be aware of the location for this show.

Playing With Snead

Dressed in a natty plaid sport jacket for his part in the morning show, Jack Lescoulie couldn't resist in-between appearances practicing his golf swing on the beautiful Tanglewood terraces for his scheduled match today with an old golf friend, Sammy Snead, who has just returned from the British Open. For the more formal part of the afternoon program in the Music Shed, Mr. Lescoulie changed to a blue suit, but spent his idle moments flipping a golf ball which he carried in the pocket of his jacket.

Sander Vanocur, White House correspondent for NBC, who came to Tanglewood to host the "Today" show for John Chancellor, who is on vacation, seemed anxious to discuss politics with Gov. John A. Volpe during an interview in the formal gardens at Tanglewood, but he kept politics out of the interview, discussing for the most part the industrial picture in Massachusetts, as well as its educational institutions.

The third member of the "Today" show cast, Miss Pat Fontaine, who was making her first visit to the Berkshires, said she "fell in love" with the area and wants to return soon. Rather than accompany Mr. Lescoulie and Mr. Vanocur back to New York in an NBC chartered plane, Miss Fontaine chose to remain a short time after the filming was completed to take a "leisurely trip" by automobile back to Manhattan from the Berkshires so she could enjoy the scenery "from the ground."

Both Mr. Lescoulie and Miss Fontaine were back at NBC at their regular reporting time this morning at 4:30, preparing for today's "Today" show from 7 to 9. Mr. Vanocur was back at the White House covering for NBC.

Tape Catches Fire

When the video tape crew finished filming the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsal of Mozart's "Paris Symphony," with Dr. Charles Munch conducting, in the Music Shed in the afternoon, the producer and BSO officials agreed it was a smooth performance until word came from the NBC sound truck that a fire in one of the cameras had destroyed the tape of the third movement of the symphony.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet with the BSO, and liaison officer for the musicians, aided the staff in timing the tape of the symphony, giving cues to the director on a split-second basis as to the time each movement would be completed. He, too, agreed the Mozart rehearsal was a success. For a few minutes it appeared the orchestra would have to go through the third movement again, and Dr. Munch was called upon to explain to the orchestra what had happened, but at that moment word was received from the mobile laboratory that another tape, made simultaneously, had saved the day. "It's perfect," said the director, Jim Gaines, and everyone was relieved.

After William Ertoll worked through a student demonstration with his string quartet class, Bartlett Hendricks, science curator of the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, closed out the show with Mr. Vanocur, explaining the paintings when he called for the BSO conductor, seemed to sum up the day's activities at Tanglewood.

Roger Tourreau, Dr. Munch's chauffeur and valet, who observed "Big advertising day today" with his French

Librizzi

'THE PARIS SYMPHONY,' by Mozart, is rehearsed in the Music Shed at Tanglewood by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as two members of the cast of "Today" show, Miss Pat Fontaine and Sander Vanocur, wait for completion of performance in front of TV cameras and prepare to shift scene to another activity.

Whitestone

BERKSHIRE MUSEUM paintings from the museum's permanent collection were filmed for the NBC show and described by Bartlett Hendricks, science curator, right, in an interview with Sander Vanocur. They are standing in front of two of the four paintings from the museum. At left is a landscape by William S. Mount, an early American painter, and at right Norman Rockwell's "Shuffleton's Barber Shop."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 19 1962

Whitestone

A STUDENT DEMONSTRATION is given by William Kroll's string quartet from the Berkshire Music Center as part of the program, which also included demonstrations by Roger Voisin's brass students. Location of the demonstration under colonnade of Music Shed was made necessary because of a downpour in afternoon.

Librizzi

SHAKER FURNITURE from the Hancock Shaker Community was the subject of part of "Today" show's program from Tanglewood, as Ross Edman, chief of education at Hancock Shaker Village, explains the pieces to Miss Pat Fontaine in the gardens.

Librizzi

BEFORE THE RAIN, the Boston Symphony Woodwind Quintet, at left, gives a performance on the Tanglewood lawn near the administration building, shortly after 7 a.m., as NBC's "Today" cameramen and lighting technicians tape part of the show to be seen on television across the country on Monday and Tuesday mornings between 7 and 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 23 1962

Six Million View 'Today' TV Show At Tanglewood

The "Today," television show, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood went off smoothly across the nation this morning and was viewed by an estimated 6 million persons.

The second portion of the National Broadcasting Company's taped television show will be carried Tuesday morning from 7 to 9. In between takes at Tanglewood, the only portion of the two-hour program not made at the Festival last Wednesday, were the newscasts given by Frank Blair from the NBC studio in New York and a film on Cape Cod.

The Tuesday program will feature interviews by Sander Vanocur, the NBC White House correspondent with Roger Voisin, principal trumpet with the BSO and a group of his students in the brass class at the Music Center, and interviews with Governor John A. Volpe and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO; a fashion show in the formal garden and an exhibition of Shaker furniture from the Hancock Shaker Community, narrated by Miss Pat Fontaine of the "Today" cast. Jack Lescoulie will interview Ralph Gomberg, first oboeist with the BSO and a concert will be performed by the BSO Woodwind Quintet.

BLANK PAGE

190

MISCELLANEOUS.

1917

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 9 1962

BSO Manager Says Tanglewood Is 'Great Boon'

LEE — Tanglewood is an enormous boon to maintaining the health and vigor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opening the way to its use throughout the summer, Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, told the Rotary Club here Tuesday.

The BSO, which has been the official Tanglewood Festival group since 1934, was founded in 1881. The orchestra gives four concerts weekly at Symphony Hall, Boston, from October to April. The Boston Pops Concerts were established chiefly to lengthen the season, Mr. Perry said.

The BSO now has the longest-playing season of any orchestra in the world, being under contract for 50 weeks. Tanglewood, he said, expands the BSO audience and is the envy of the musical world with the site's infinite capacity and beautiful area.

A board of 20 unpaid trustees, mostly from Boston, governs the BSO. The conductor is responsible for the music, how it is played and by whom.

Earn Over $10,000

Minimum salary of a musician, base pay, is about $9,000. Most BSO musicians earn from $10,500 to $11,000, often with extra earnings from teaching, recordings and allied activities. A new musician, selected carefully by jury from candidates at a "blind" audition, comes to the orchestra on a year's probation, Mr. Perry explained.

Management of the BSO consists of about 40 people, who take care of contracts, publicity, auditions, concerts, staging and such.

It costs more than $2 million a year to run the orchestra, which earns about 90 per cent of its keep.

This is remarkable, Mr. Perry said, in that many orchestras earn only about 40 or 50 per cent of their expenses, the balance being provided by public subscription. He predicted a wider use of televison by symphony orchestras.

Mr. Perry intimated that the "new climate in Washington with a great deal of talk of federal subsidy" might be helpful to the BSO in view of the upswing in popularity of symphony entertainment.

He said the symphony orchestra in the United States is the most favored form of musical culture, although the form is historically young. Italians like opera passionately, he observed, but England prefers chorales. It is only about 150 years since public concerts came into being. The symphony orchestra is now about as elaborate a musical machine as you can imagine, Mr. Perry said.

Rotarian John D. Hatch of Stockbridge introduced Mr. Perry who, he noted, is building a new house on 10 acres of land in West Stockbridge.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 17 1962

Officials Gather At Tanglewood To Discuss Traffic

TANGLEWOOD — Boston Symphony Orchestra officials recently invited to luncheon on the Tanglewood grounds 15 members of the local and state police, the Massachusetts highway department, New York Thruway, Registry of Motor Vehicles, the Berkshire Hills Conference, and selectmen from Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee, to discuss any matters pertaining to the routing of traffic during the peak of the Tanglewood season. This has come to be an annual practice with the hope that any problems can be anticipated before they occur.

At this year's meeting all agreed that traffice at the opening concerts had moved to and from Tanglewood with ease. Problems brought about by the construction in the vicinity of the Berkshire Garden Center at Routes 102 and 183 were covered, and the feeling was that Tanglewood traffic would be heaviest during non-working hours thus relieving much of the congestion. Police are prepared to route traffic through this area to make it as easy as possible for motorists traveling to Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

JUL 19 1962

N.E. Resort Personalities STOCKBRIDGE

Miss Robinson Smith's Shed in the Berkshires

By JOE HARRINGTON

STOCKBRIDGE—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the lady most responsible for bringing symphonic music to the Berkshire Hills, where Tanglewood has become known to concert-goers throughout the world, was never a student of music herself. She enjoys it and attends concerts, but at her home here she identified herself as an organizer and an executive.

Last Friday Miss Robinson Smith was 81. One of her neighbors suggested giving her a party, but she requested it be deferred until her 85th birthday.

Of course, she gets satisfaction from the success of Tanglewood and the appeal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. (This year they will continue until Aug. 26.) But she likes to recall the early days when she organized the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934 and it was a community affair. American Legion members took charge of the parking; local girls and students acted as ushers.

She was pleased when Special Officer Bill Noonan of Lenox told her one of the old crowd was asking about her health and recalled the delicious garlic sandwiches she served to the local workers at her home.

But she doesn't mention the bronze tablet erected by the Boston Symphony on the Tanglewood music shed, paying tribute to her leadership. The huge edifice, in an attractive woodland setting, has a roof expanse of an acre and a half and a capacity of over 6000.

When she was head of the drive for the $100,000 to build the structure, some of her associates thought it would be appropriate to call it the "pavillion" or "casino."

Miss Robinson Smith felt that "shed" was more typical of New England and it is so named.

★ ★ ★

How it all began when the composer-conductor, Dr. Henry Hadley, told her of his dream of Summer concerts is recounted by John G. W. Mahanna, Pittsfield news editor, in his book, "Music Under the Moon."

(William Tague Photo, Pittsfield)
GERTRUDE ROBINSON SMITH—Stockbridge's benefactor first brought music to the Berkshire Hills back in 1934.

Through the efforts of this woman, who interested friends and neighbors in the project, the first concerts were held at Hanna Farm in August of 1934.

The first series were on financially shaky ground, but with the persistence of Miss Robinson Smith and the other directors of the Festival, they were continued annually.

The early concerts were given in a huge tent and she told of the night of Aug. 12, 1937, when a terrific thunderstorm distracted an all-Wagner program which was being given by the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. At its conclusion she mounted the stage and said to the audience:

"Now do you see why we must have a permanent building for these concerts?"

That night $30,000 was pledged to the building fund and by the next Summer the shed was completed.

★ ★ ★

A New York resident, Miss Robinson Smith has been coming to Stockbridge for years. Her father was Charles R. Smith, a corporation lawyer, and her sister, Mrs. Lyman Beecher Stowe, lives a short distance from her home. Mrs. Stowe has two sons and four grandchildren.

About 300,000 people come to Tanglewood, located between Lenox and Stockbridge, for the eight weeks of Summer concerts.

All of the outstanding figures are represented and the Tanglewood school has given this area a keen appreciation of good music. But it wasn't always this way.

The lady who began it all tells her friends a little anecdote that took place 32 years ago when she stopped at a filling station and informed the proprietor that 64 members of the New York Symphony were coming to Stockbridge.

"What for?" he asked.

"To give concerts."

"You mean," asked the filling station man, a disciple of Yankee frugality, "the whole 64 of them are going to play together?"

NEXT — George Bisacca's one-man museum, where a Lenox bride received a 21-gun salute.

News
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,520

JUL 5 1962

Tanglewood Trips Start Sunday

Springfield — Mrs. Helen Taft, Adult Program Director for the YWCA in Springfield, announces that trips to Tanglewood will start on July 8, Sunday, and continue on Sundays until July 29.

Travel will be by chartered bus and those who wish to enjoy the music of Bach and Beethoven against the backdrop of the beautiful Berkshires, can make reservations now. YMCA members may bring guests. It will be necessary to take one's lunch or buy it at Tanglewood.

Buses leave the YWCA, 26 Howard St., Springfield, at 12:30 p. m. arriving back in Springfield by 6:00 o'clock.

To make reservations call the YWCA, RE 2-3121.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 10 1962

Tanglewood Envy of All Orchestras

LEE—Tanglewood is an enormous boon to maintaining the health and vigor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opening the way to its use throughout the summer, Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, told the Rotary Club here.

The BSO now has the longest-playing season of any orchestra in the world, being under contract for 50 weeks. Tanglewood, he said, expands the BSO audience and is the envy of the musical world with the site's infinite capacity and beautiful area.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MANHATTAN EAST
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

JUL 5 1962

Charles Munch Photos

Candid camera shots of Charles Munch conducting rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are among the informal photographs of the famed conductor now on view in the Music Library of the New York Public Library, 121 East 58th Street. The exhibit will continue through August 31, and is open to the public on Mondays and Wednesdays until 9 p.m. and on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays until 6 p.m.

192

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 78,016

JUL 2 8 1962

Famous Fables By Edgar

COLLECTOR: Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch is also an art collector. Like everyone else addicted to this costly hobby, he has to justify to himself every expensive purchase.

Once, after the orchestra had given a particularly fine performance, he went with a friend to an art gallery and treated himself to a water color.

"I am buying this as a reward," he told his companion, who was staggered by the price.

The following week, the orchestra gave a performance which was not up to its usual standard. Munch took his friend to another gallery and bought some etchings.

"And why are you buying these?" asked his friend.

"I need consolation," lamely explained the conductor.

BMI
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUN 1962

KIRCHNER ELECTED

LEON KIRCHNER recently was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony next season, and opera singer Leontyne Price were similarly honored.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 1 5 1962

A TIP FROM MUNCH

Stadium Should Follow Berkshire Pattern

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CONTEMPORARY music struggles for a hearing at Lewisohn Stadium every Summer. It fares better at the Berkshire Festival, more so perhaps than people realize. Usually both Stadium Concerts and Tanglewood events rely on the staples to attract substantial audiences.

●

SOMEBODY MIGHT POINT out that last week at the Stadium the programs balanced the contemporary with the standard repertory decisively. What with the all-Gershwin concert and Stravinsky's 80th birthday concert, both aspects of the contemporary field are well represented. What more could one ask? Since two pieces by Samuel Barber constitute the only other contemporary items of note in three weeks of concerts, the representation is still scant.

After the Berkshire Festival's Bach and Mozart weekends, however, the remaining five list about a dozen contemporary works among various programs. No effort has been made to feature them; they exist because of Charles Munch's persistent interest in the contemporary in spite of the conservative trend of the programing in general.

●

IT IS WORTH WHILE TO CALL attention to what is being played, usually two works in the course of a weekend. Only by repeated hearings do audiences really get acquainted with this new music.

It may reflect Mr. Munch's taste; but through the 13 years of his Boston Symphony stewardship, he has shown discriminating judgment in his choice of modern works.

Piston's Symphony No. 6, Haieff's Symphony No. 3, Honegger's Symphony No. 5, and Martinu's Fantasies Symphonique mark the first two weekends of the full Boston Symphony performances. Attention should be called to Bruckner's Symphony No. 8, which William Steinberg will play on Aug. 4, as still comparatively unfamiliar to Tanglewood audiences!

Fine's Symphony (1962) on Aug. 12 is least known among these works. Kirchner's Sinfonia may be classified similarly, with Foss's "Time Cycle" somewhat better known. Perhaps Prokofieff's Symphony No. 6 may not be too familiar either.

●

WORKS LIKE BARTOK'S CONCERTO for Orchestra, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Copland's "Quiet City" may now be considered standard fare. It is interesting that Mr. Munch has placed the Copland work as the curtain raiser for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at his farewell concert on Aug. 26.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events regularly in the daily Journal-American.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUL 1 4 1962

Music

Return to Tanglewood Finds Magic Retained

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Returning to Tanglewood last week after an absence of nearly two decades, I felt at first like an intruder. So much of it had changed. In that paradise of pure sound and pure green I was a stranger.

But only at first. Slowly the benign mood of the place settled on me. Everybody was completely at ease, the huge steel shed gradually shrank in size, and the hills and lawns closed in hospitably.

Informality Is Key.

With the first notes of Bach, the prodigal son was back in the combined bosom of music and nature. If anywhere on earth these two mainstays of the good life blend to perfection, it is up there in the Berkshires.

And they did so last Sunday with an informality that was as natural as it was graceful. As befitted the strong sun, people sat about in sartorial comfort. They sought shade under trees on chairs or lay on their backs in the open. And they listened.

Tanglewood patrons who cling to their choice seats, however acoustically advisable that is, miss a great opportunity of studying how the other half listens. For beyond the purlieus of the shed are the real music-lovers.

Alone, in twos, or in huddled family groups, facing the music or the sloping vistas of foothills and mountains beyond, they take it all in like nourishment. Casual though they seem, they are wholly absorbed.

The True Spirit.

Theirs is the true spirit of the place. From the distant platform come the deathless sounds of Bach's genius, as much a wonder of earth as the velvety carpet of green about them.

They might be little beach parties, only a moment before active and raucous, now suddenly becalmed by the sunlit symphony of wind and wave. They are absolutely motionless and noiseless.

When I left my seat for a stroll, during the music last Sunday, I found myself almost tiptoeing over the lawn, as if even the grass couldn't muffle my footfalls. It seemed sacrilege to disturb that peace.

Only Bach Was Heard.

As far as my explorations took me, over acres of trim ground, the only sounds that reached me were those of Bach. Tempting as it might have been in the informal setting, nobody talked. Not a single program rustled.

Thousands of these people had travelled by car, train, and bus, hundreds of miles, on a very hot day, to enjoy the music of a favorite composer beneath the vault of heaven. They looked more than amply rewarded.

For me that crowd was even more fascinating than the music and the performances themselves. They were like a new breed of sun-worshippers whose god was the sun and whose prophet was Bach.

I feel certain everybody came away a better listener, a better person, and a better driver—all except me. I don't drive. But, then, neither did

192

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 78,016

JUL 28 1962

Famous Fables By Edgar

COLLECTOR: Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch is also an art collector. Like everyone else addicted to this costly hobby, he has to justify to himself every expensive purchase.

Once, after the orchestra had given a particularly fine performance, he went with a friend to an art gallery and treated himself to a water color.

"I am buying this as a reward," he told his companion, who was staggered by the price.

The following week, the orchestra gave a performance which was not up to its usual standard. Munch took his friend to another gallery and bought some etchings.

"And why are you buying these?" asked his friend.

"I need consolation," lamely explained the conductor.

BMI
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUN 1962

KIRCHNER ELECTED

LEON KIRCHNER recently was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony next season, and opera singer Leontyne Price were similarly honored.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D- 617,250 S. 773,570

JUL 15 1962

A TIP FROM MUNCH

Stadium Should Follow Berkshire Pattern

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CONTEMPORARY music struggles for a hearing at Lewisohn Stadium every Summer. It fares better at the Berkshire Festival, more so perhaps than people realize. Usually both Stadium Concerts and Tanglewood events rely on the staples to attract substantial audiences.

•

SOMEBODY MIGHT POINT out that last week at the Stadium the programs balanced the contemporary with the standard repertory decisively. What with the all-Gershwin concert and Stravinsky's 80th birthday concert, both aspects of the contemporary field are well represented. What more could one ask? Since two pieces by Samuel Barber constitute the only other contemporary items of note in three weeks of concerts, the representation is still scant.

After the Berkshire Festival's Bach and Mozart weekends, however, the remaining five list about a dozen contemporary works among various programs. No effort has been made to feature them; they exist because of Charles Munch's persistent interest in the contemporary in spite of the conservative trend of the programing in general.

•

IT IS WORTH WHILE TO CALL attention to what is being played, usually two works in the course of a weekend. Only by repeated hearings do audiences really get acquainted with this new music.

It may reflect Mr. Munch's taste, but through the 13 years of his Boston Symphony stewardship, he has shown discriminating judgment in his choice of modern works.

Piston's Symphony No. 6, Haieff's Symphony No. 3, Honegger's Symphony No. 5, and Martinu's Fantasies Symphonique mark the first two weekends of the full Boston Symphony performances. Attention should be called to Bruckner's Symphony No. 8, which William Steinberg will play on Aug. 4, as still comparatively unfamiliar to Tanglewood audiences!

Fine's Symphony (1962) on Aug. 12 is least known among these works. Kirchner's Sinfonia may be classified similarly, with Foss's "Time Cycle" somewhat better known. Perhaps Prokofieff's Symphony No. 6 may not be too familiar either.

•

WORKS LIKE BARTOK'S CONCERTO for Orchestra, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Copland's "Quiet City" may now be considered standard fare. It is interesting that Mr. Munch has placed the Copland work as the curtain raiser for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at his farewell concert on Aug. 26.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events regularly in the daily Journal-American.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 483,241 SAT. 176,139

JUL 14 1962

Music

Return to Tanglewood Finds Magic Retained

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Returning to Tanglewood last week after an absence of nearly two decades, I felt at first like an intruder. So much of it had changed. In that paradise of pure sound and pure green I was a stranger.

But only at first. Slowly the benign mood of the place settled on me. Everybody was completely at ease, the huge steel shed gradually shrank in size, and the hills and lawns closed in hospitably.

Informality Is Key.

With the first notes of Bach, the prodigal son was back in the combined bosom of music and nature. If anywhere on earth these two mainstays of the good life blend to perfection, it is up there in the Berkshires.

And they did so last Sunday with an informality that was as natural as it was graceful. As befitted the strong sun, people sat about in sartorial comfort. They sought shade under trees on chairs or lay on their backs in the open. And they listened.

Tanglewood patrons who cling to their choice seats, however acoustically advisable that is, miss a great opportunity of studying how the other half listens. For beyond the purlieus of the shed are the real music-lovers.

Alone, in twos, or in huddled family groups, facing the music or the sloping vistas of foothills and mountains beyond, they take it all in like nourishment. Casual though they seem, they are wholly absorbed.

The True Spirit.

Theirs is the true spirit of the place. From the distant platform come the deathless sounds of Bach's genius, as much a wonder of earth as the velvety carpet of green about them.

They might be little beach parties, only a moment before active and raucous, now suddenly becalmed by the sunlit symphony of wind and wave. They are absolutely motionless and noiseless.

When I left my seat for a stroll, during the music last Sunday, I found myself almost tiptoeing over the lawn, as if even the grass couldn't muffle my footfalls. It seemed sacrilege to disturb that peace.

Only Bach Was Heard.

As far as my explorations took me, over acres of trim ground, the only sounds that reached me were those of Bach. Tempting as it might have been in the informal setting, nobody talked. Not a single program rustled.

Thousands of these people had travelled by car, train, and bus, hundreds of miles, on a very hot day, to enjoy [illegible] poser beneath the vault of heaven. They looked more than amply rewarded.

For me that crowd was even more fascinating than the music and the performances themselves. They were like a new breed of sun-worshippers whose god was the sun and whose prophet was Bach.

I feel certain everybody came away a better listener, a better person, and a better driver—all except me. I don't [illegible]. But then, neither did

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 28 1962

Mitchell

BOXHOLDERS at the opening of Tanglewood Berkshire Nights, the first of five Friday evening concerts, include John Burbank Jr. of 63 Donna Ave., Terry Hallock of Richmond and Mrs. Burbank, standing, and, seated, Mrs. Thomas F. Plunkett Jr. of 11 Spadina Parkway, Mrs. Hallock and Mr. Plunkett, who chat before the program.

Berkshire Nights Open at Tanglewood

Mitchell

VISITOR from New Orleans, Mrs. Julius Goldman, with her hostess, Mrs. Albert C. England of 159 Wendell Ave., leave the box section during intermission at the concert, which featured Debussy, Piston and Brahms.

Whitestone

IN FRONT SECTION as Charles Munch, the BSO conductor, mounts the podium, are Mrs. Robert S. Hibbard of Lenox, Mr. Hibbard, Mrs. Roy P. Walchenbach of 64 Bartlett Ave. and Dr. Walchenbach. A total of 5,013 persons attended the event in the Music Shed, the first full orchestra concert of the eight-week festival season.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TELEGRAPH
D. 69,833
SAT JAN 27 1962

Attack July Dates for Berkshire

(Special to The Morning Telegraph)

HANCOCK, Mass., Jan. 26.—Berkshire Downs, which last season posted gains and 108 per cent in attendance of 22 per cent in mutuel play over its inaugural meeting in 1960, has petitioned the Massachusetts State Racing Commission for permission to conduct a 24-day meeting from July 2 to 28, this year. The track operated from September 18 to October 14 last season.

The request for earlier dates has resulted in much protest by the operators of the nearby Tanglewood Music Festival, the new Shaker Village Museum, the July 4 muster of the nearby Pittsfield Fire Department and other local groups.

The Racing Commission, which held a meeting on the track's petition here recently has taken the matter under advisement. It must announce a decision by January 30, according to the state's racing law.

Track Operators' Stand.

The track operators contend that the July dates would benefit the entire Berkshire vacation area, would increase revenue to the state, as the track would be operating at the peak of the tourist and would "set a precedent" in the granting of dates in future seasons. A new track in Vermont, just across the Berkshire County line, is scheduled to open in 1963 Bernard J. Francis of West Hartford, Conn., president of Berkshire Downs, told the commission that a "certain comity" existed between the operators of racetracks in New England and the granting of July dates to Berkshire would mean that they would be "respected" by the operators of the proposed plant in Vermont when that track applies for dates.

Francis told the commission it would be "impossible" to operate in August as it would put Berkshire in direct competition with Saratoga. "New York State is our primary market," he said.

"If the proposed Vermont track operates in July, continued operation of Berkshire Downs in September and October would be like asking us to run our sales after Christmas," he added.

For the record, however, Francis told the commission that he would accept alternate dates if the commission rejected the proposed scheduled in July.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,147,218
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
JUL 1 1962

Munch-In-Review

Candid rehearsal and backstage photos of conductor Charles Munch, taken over the past 15 years, will be exhibited in the music room of the public library at 121 E. 58th St. for two months starting tomorrow. Among Munch's fellow artists shown are Artur Rubinstein, Hugh Ross, Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux. Munch is conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his 13th and final season at the Berkshire Music Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUN 24 1962

TANGLEWOOD TRIPS SPONSORED BY YWCA

First Concert Visit Will Be July 8

The first two of a series of summer Tanglewood trips sponsored by the Young Women's Christian Association are scheduled for Sunday, July 8, and Sunday, July 29, according to Mrs. Helen Taft, YWCA, program director. The concert series this season will be more interesting than usual as Charles Munch, music director who will retire this year, has announced that he will pay a unique tribute to the orchestra and has invited 10 of its members to be soloists during the summer. One of the concerts in which a soloist will participate is that of July 8.

The local group will leave the "YW." 26 Howard St., at 12.30 p. m. Those attending may take a lunch or may purchase it on the grounds at Tanglewood. The concert is scheduled for 2.30, and the return time of arrival in this city will be around 6 p. m.

Early reservations are advised as the number of tickets available are limited. Reservations may be made by calling the "YW."

The July 8 program, with Mr. Munch conducting, is announced as follows: Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, Concerto for Oboe and Violin, Cantata: Trauer-Ode, Bach, with Tanglewood choir, soloists, Hugh Ross conducting.

Pierre Monteux will be conductor for the July 29 program, which will be Symphony No. 2, Beethoven; Dido's Lament, Purcell; "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," Weber; Ein Heldenleben, Strauss.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 16 1962

Bullard Park Now Open Daily SBA Announces

STOCKBRIDGE — John Dav Hatch, president of the Stoc bridge Bowl Association (SBA has announced that Bullard Par is now open daily until sundown visitors.

The opening of the park ha been made possible by an anony mous donation and the coopera tion of the Boston Symphony Or chestra, which owns the land ad jacent to the park.

Arrangements have been made with James Brosnahan to have a member of the Tanglewood staff to open and close the gate at the park each day. Other arrangements will be made after the Tanglewood season closes Aug. 26. The park will continue open through the fall.

The upper woods in the 70 acre park are accessible and the lower woods are now being cleared. The park was left to the SBA for public use by the late Mrs. Mary Robbins Reynolds Bullard of Lenox the stipulation that the pi "be preserved for pos- te its natural state."

An education and recreation committee headed by Nathan G. Horwitt is now making plans for the long-range use of the park. Because of the stipulation by which the land was provided, however, no development of areas of the park for swimming, picnicking or camping is foreseen.

194

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUN 30 1962

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

WHAT I HEARD on my first day at Tanglewood this year, and what I expect to hear in the ensuing weeks are a far cry from one another. The silence of that afternoon in mid June was broken only by the discordant cacophony of mowing machines, the off-beat whishing of water sprayers, and the only singing that of birds high in the lofty Hawthorne Pines. During the eight weeks commencing on July 2, music in all of its forms will pour forth from countless practice rooms, studios, barns, the Theater, and the Music Shed which dot this summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. By then the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony, will be in full voice. But not now, as these are the days of preparation.

As I write this, later, a gentle rain, much needed, is falling to the great delight of Tanglewood Superintendent James Kiley. For weeks throughout the dry spring, he has fretted over and carefully nursed the great lawns to the green toughness which they will need to bear the burden of the thousands of feet which will trod them bearing their owners to the sounds of music.

A few feet away I can hear the muffled sounds of the staff of the ticket office as the advance guard begins its operations by placing tickets in the proper receptacles, answering an already bulging mail, and commencing the happy task of selling tickets to those who come to their windows.

* * *

IN THE MAIN HOUSE the sounds are those of the Berkshire Music Center personnel busily engaged in processing the myriad forms for the students who will soon descend upon them. Indeed these are the sounds of the days of preparation, for the casual visitor may now go along the paths to the Music Shed and the formal gardens in relative silence and drink in the majestic beauty that is Tanglewood. In July and August bright young college boys will guide visitors through the grounds explaining the workings of the Berkshire Festival, the Berkshire Music Center and its parent Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I hear a hammer beating in the Music Shed where in two short weeks Charles Munch will tap his baton for silence and the first rehearsal of the Boston Symphony's Tanglewood season will begin. Before this can occur the hammer must finish its work and other mighty forces will complete the major operation of moving the Orchestra's headquarters from Symphony Hall to Lenox. Along the Massachusetts Turnpike from Boston will come several truckloads of filing cabinets, chairs, tables, books, and curiously marked boxes laden with the equipment necessary for the managerial, business, press, and other officials to continue their work.

* * *

UNTIL JULY 1 the musicians of the Orchestra will be playing the Pops Concerts in Symphony Hall, following which they will adjourn to the Hatch Shell on Boston's Esplanade for two more weeks of concerts. The completion of these open air programs signals another move to Tanglewood, as the players along with their instruments and hundreds of music scores head westward across the state to Tanglewood.

The task of caring for the accouterment of two portions of the orchestra, the Bach-Mozart chamber orchestra at Tanglewood and the Esplanade group in Boston, in the proper place at the proper time, falls to Al Roberson, the new stage manager of the BSO. He succeeds Harvey Genereaux who held the position for many years prior to his sudden and untimely death during the winter.

* * *

ON CONSIDERING the many aspects of the Tanglewood season: BSO concerts; concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center; weekly chamber music programs; appearances by Eugene Ormandy, William Steinberg, Pierre Monteux, and the numerous soloists of renown, two things stand out which will make the 1962 season different from any preceding one. For the first time in its history, Tanglewood will run an eight week season, and with the final concert on August 26, Charles Munch will retire following 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I recall that August afternoon in 1948 when Serge Koussevitzy brought down his baton for the final time as music director. The music had scarcely drifted away before the onrushing audience let forth a thunderous ovation. It was exciting yet it caught one's heart. A later day in August, 1962 an equally appreciative audience will await the present conductor; but before his task is completed, he must direct his men through eight strenuous weeks of the Berkshire Festival.

At the moment of writing, a season of music at Tanglewood seems far in the distance. But seventy Baldwin pianos are coming, the BSO staff is coming, equipment is coming, scores are coming, and in the first week of July the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood 1962 will be making history.

Mr. Sistare is assistant public relations director at Tanglewood. This is the first of nine weekly columns by him on various Festival subjects.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
APR 8 1962

Music

Berkshire Music Hews To Set Line

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Programs for the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood probably will receive another blast from the New York press, as did those last summer.

Metropolitan newspaper ctiticism has been largely twofold: That the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch and guest conductors repeat too much repertory played in Boston nuring the previous season; that the programs are hackneyed and lack new interest.

New York cirtics covered very little of the Berkshire Festival last summer and the Boston press was there infrequently.

Boston Symphony management has countered with the following arguements: Comparatively few members of the Tanglewood audiences previously heard the programs in Boston; there is not enough time between the close of the Symphony Hall, Pops concerts and Esplanade concerts to prepare new repertory for Tanglewood.

This summer's programs not only repeat a large segment of this season's Boston repertory, but include in the main, works that have been played at Tanglewood many times.

The Berkshire Festival will be eight weeks — July 6 thrugh August 26.

Weekend concerts will be Friday and Saturday nights, and Sunday afternoons. This summer, evening concerts will begin at 8, instean of 8:30. Sunday afternoon concerts will remain at 2:30.

The first weekend will be devoted to music by Bach; second and third weekends, music by Mozart. As usual, there are some unusual items. A few: Bach's Concerto for Two Pianos in C, Bach's Ricercare from the Musical Offering; Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music, Haieff's Symphony No. 3, Honegger's Symphony No. 5, Rameau's Dardanus Suite, Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), Kirchner Sinfonia and Lukas Foss' Time Cycle.

Reverting back to tradition (changed last summer) the festival will end with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Washington's cultural life has received a blow with the departure of the Budapest String Quartet from its residence (for 23 years) at the Library of Congress.

The quartet is quitting Washington because, said cellist Mischa Schneider, "We want to have more time to tour the world." One great regret is that they must give up the Stradivarius instruments donated to the Library by Gertrude Clarke Whittall of Worcester. The instruments must remain at the library.

Replacing the Budapest Quartet at the library will be the Juilliard Spring Quartet, which played at the Worcester Art Museum in 1954 and on Clark University Fine Arts Course in 1959.

RUSSIAN REVERSAL

In February, 1950, the central committee of the Communist party censured seven Russian composers, including Shostakovich and Prokofiev.

Their music was scored as "smelling strongly of the modern bourgeois culture." These composers were not following the party line and were lapsing dangerously into the doctrine (evil by Communist standards) that art is international.

Exactly 12 days ago, a group of Soviet composers pleaded (in Moscow) for a closer study of modern Western composers' music. No reference to "bourgeois modernism."

Official agency Tass reported the remarks of a group led by Kara Karayev, a prominent composer from Azerbaijan, and Evegny Tikotsky, head of the Byelo-Russian composers' union. Tass said that they "claimed that the creative quest of modern foreign composers 'should not be ignored."

What became of those Russian portraits of Tchaikovsky and Glinka with their hands over their ears?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,409
MAY 8 1962

A favorite annual program with many New Englanders is the Berkshire Festival which will be held this year from July 4 to August 26, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The idea of music under the moon in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts was two years old when, in 1936, the board of Berkshire Symphonic Festival invited the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give three concerts in a tent temporarily erected on the lawns of the former Vanderbilt estate in Lenox. Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the autumn of 1936 as the new and permanent site for the Festivals and first used in the summer of 1937 for six Festival concerts. A severe thunderstorm where, according to one critic, "even the French horns were shipping water," interrupted one of these concerts and dramatically proved the inadequacy of rented tents and the need for a permanent covered structure for future concerts. Berkshire residents raised sufficient funds to build the 6000 seat Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Shed was first used for the six Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in the 1938 Festival. Since 1936, three concerts in four days to 15,000 people, Berkshire Festival has grown into an internationally renowned center visited each summer by more than a quarter million persons, who during the eight week season, hear 24 concerts by the orchestra, 8 public rehearsals of the orchestra, 8 chamber music concerts and more than 50 concerts by the 300 students of the Orchestra's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Center, which is in session at Tanglewood for the Festival period.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

JUL 8 1962

Tanglewood Opens Season July 6

A favorite stop for Summer vacationers to New England is the great estate called Tanglewood which is tucked into the green Berkshire Hills of southwestern Massachusetts — a few miles from the Connecticut and New York state lines and a short drive from the New York Thruway, the Taconic Parkway and the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Since 1936 Tanglewood has been the Summer home of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra and here the orchestra holds its annual Berkshire Festival concerts and operates the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school of music that trained Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Mario Lanza, Leontyne Price and many others.

A few auditoriums have have been built at Tanglewood but most of the 210 acres have been left in formal gardens, the hemlock hedges and avenues of tall pine set out soon after William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker and merchant, bought this land in 1848 and incorporated several farms into a gentleman's estate.

* * *

NATHANIEL Hawthorne arrived at Tanglewood, depressed and impoverished, in 1850 and lived on the estate in 1850-1851. Here he was visited and encouraged by Longfellow, Holmes and Melville — the "jungle of literary lions" then living and writing in the Berkshires. A replica of the Hawthorne cottage ("The Little Red House") is a favorite of visitors to Tanglewood.

Guided tours through the Tanglewood grounds originate from the main gate many times every day during the eight week Berkhire Festival season. Visitors see not only the beautifully manicured grounds and the view from the porch of the original mansion which looks over Lake Mahkeenac and Monument Mountain but they are shown the 6000-seat Music Shed where the 106 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with famous guest conductors and star soloists, perform each weekend during the Festival weeks. Visitors also see the interesting Theatre-Concert Hall and the small Chamber Music Hall which were designed by Eero Saarinen and are now used during the summer weeks for Festival and school events.

* * *

THE IDEA of music under the moon in the Berkshire Hills was two years old when, in 1936, the Board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival invited the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give three concerts in a tent temporarily erected on the lawns of the former Vanderbilt estate in Lenox.

The Tanglewood estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the autumn of 1936 as the new and permanent site for the Festivals and first used in the summer of 1937 for six Festival concerts. A severe thunderstorm where, according to one critic, "even the French horns were shipping water," interrupted one of these concerts and dramatically proved the inadequacy of rented tents and the need for a permanent covered structure for future concerts.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open July 6 and close Aug. 26. Most of the Orchestra concerts will be conducted by Charles Munch —his final conerts before retirement as the Orhestra's Music Director. He has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to appear as guest conductors during the Festival. Among the famous soloists who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are pianists Rudolf Serkin and the young Americans Gary Graffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and the Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin. The final Festival concert on Aug. 26 will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood in a special program on Thursday, Aug. 2.

Detailed information on Tanglewood with complete program and ticket prices is available, until June 18, from the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15 (CO 6-1492). After June 18 the Festival Ticket Office will be at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Information on accommodations, the fine restaurants and other summer activities in the Berkkshires are available from the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

GARDEN CITY, N.Y.
NEWSDAY
D. 318,875

FRI FEB 23 1962

Offer Philharmonic Summer Plac

Glen Cove—Mayor Joseph M. Reilly yesterday offered the New York Philharmonic the use of the 25-acre Morgan Memorial Park for a summer home. But Reilly later apparently abandoned hope for the orchestra program when he learned that a minimum of 30 acres for parking facilities would be required.

A list of the Philharmonic's requirements for a Tanglewood-type summer house was passed on by Norman Blankman, a millionaire Sands Point real estate operator who last week suggested that the New York orchestra could be attracted to Long Island for a five-week summer season. Blankman, who has held tentative talks with the Philharmonic's managers, said the group's physical requirements included parking facilities for 3,000 cars in order to attract at least 5,000 or 6,000 persons to each performance. This would mean at least 30 acres for parking, Blankman said.

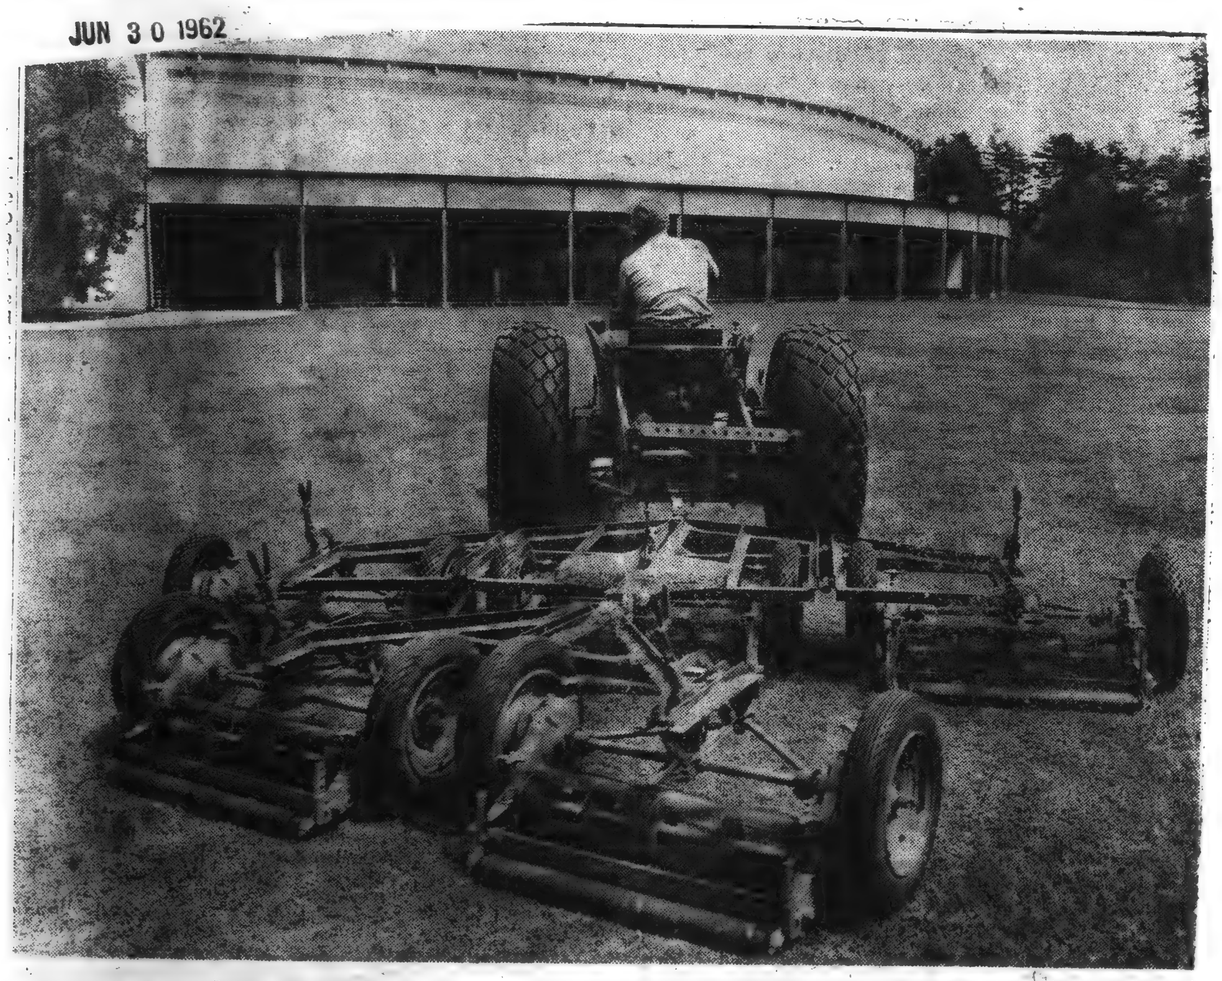
"If they need that, there's not much we can do about it," said Reilly, when he learned of the parking requirement. Morgan Memorial Park is a grassy wooded area that slopes down to Long Island Sound. Earlier Reilly had said he thought Glen Cove had Tanglewood—the present summer home in Massachusetts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—"beaten because we have water."

He said, "We could be out in boats listening to the music." Reilly's letter inviting the Philharmonic to look over Glen Cove's facilities was sent yesterday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUN 30 1962



Librizzi

MANICURING TANGLEWOOD in preparation for the official opening tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, Superintendent James M. Kiley rides a gang mower that will cut the five acres of lawn in five hours. The rig includes two mowers in front of tractor, thus cutting ahead of tractor wheels which flatten grass, making a close cut difficult.

196

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 18 1962

Oxford Student Puts English On Tiddly Wink

All this concentration is being caused by a flying "wink," barely discernible above the left hand of Leonard J. Atherton, seated at center, a student of Keble College, Oxford University, England, and a member of the Oxford tiddly winks team which will play American teams here later this year. Seated at left is David Willis, a professional musician from London, and at right is Miss Toby Korn of Irvington, N. J. Standing is Mark Knight, also of London. The four are students for summer at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center in Lenox.

Tiddly Winks Team in U. S. Makes Sport of Child's Play

Advance Guard of English Champions From Oxford Demonstrates Skill in Berkshires

PITTSFIELD—Tiddly winks, anyone?

Raised in Stature

Don't laugh. It may not be long before this child's pastime, which has been raised to the stature of a sport by apparently adult Englishmen, may be sweeping the U. S.

An English tiddly winks team will soon arrive in the U. S. to do battle with a number of American teams, recruited mostly from U. S. colleges and universities.

An advance guard of the English team is already here. He is Leonard J. Atherton of Keble College, Oxford University, who is over here studying choral directing at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox. He is a member of the Oxford team.

The way Atherto nexplains it, the sport of tiddly wings, despite its insipid name, requires great skill, much patience and a great deal of concentration.

Extremely Poular

At Oxford, Atherton said, the game is an extremely popular Sunday afternoon time-killer. Keble College alone, he said, has 30 members enrolled in its tiddly winks club. This year, Atherton explained with pride, Oxford won the annual championship tiddly wings match with Cambridge University. Thus, it is Oxford that is sending a four-man team over here later this year to vie with American teams.

As any child can tell you but very few (American) adults, tiddly wings is played with a number of "winks," which are flat buttons without the holes, and the object is to get the winks into a cup placed at the center of a mat. The winks are "flicked" by pressing down on them near their edges with a larger wink called, of course, a "winker."

If one of the winks lands on another wink, the later is out of play until the top wink is flicked.

This engenders a great deal of excitement, Atherton explained, because the player whose wink is covered can in turn endeavor to cover the covering wink—and so on.

So as we said before, "Diddly winks, anyone?"

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

JUL 24 1962

YWCA Sponsoring Trip To Tanglewood Sunday

Chartered Bus Arranged for Symphony Listeners

A chartered bus is scheduled to leave the YWCA residence, 2 Howard St., Sunday to attend the concert presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival Tanglewood, according to Miss Janet Easton, YWCA summer program director.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteaux will present, Beethoven's Symphony No. 2; Purcell: "Dido's Lament" (Gray-Masse) Weber: "Ocean, Thy Mighty Monster" (Gray-Masse); Strauss "Ein Heldenleben."

The bus will arrive at Tanglewood in time for the group to enjoy lunch on the spacious lawns surrounding the picturesque concert area. There are facilities available on the grounds for buying lunch, or bring it from home.

A limited number of tickets are available so immediate reservations are necessary. YWCA members may bring guests. Call the YWCA for reservations. The bus will arrive back at the YWCA on Howard St. by 6 p. m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,217

JUN 30 1962

BSO First Played Here Just Fifty Years Ago

Twenty-four years before the opening of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first appearance in the Berkshires, at the old Colonial Theater on Pittsfield's South Street.

A full account of the concert directed by the German conductor, Max Fiedler, was carried in the Berkshire Evening Eagle on April 16, 1912 —the same day the sinking of the Titanic story broke and shocked the world.

Immediately after the concert, Fiedler who had been "loaned" to the Boston organization for four years, was recalled to his homeland by Kaiser Wilhelm. The Pittsfield engagement was the conductor's last American appearance.

Max Fiedler was not a relative of the currently better known Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor. Arthur's family came from Austria.

* * *

Crowds came from miles around to the Pittsfield concert, which was a social as well as a musical event. Every one of the 1,400 seats in the theater was occupied. Prices ranged from $1 for a gallery seat to $15 for a box.

Ben Franklin of Troy was the promoter and brought the orchestra to the city at a cost of $2,000. Ulysse Buhler, the grand old man of Berkshire music, and Prof. F. J. Liddle, then director of the Pittsfield symphony orchestra, handled local arrangements, and the Berkshire Eagle pronounced the event an outstanding success.

The Eagle didn't have Jay Rosenfeld for music critic then, although he was in the audience and remembers the performance well. The editor wrote the review, with such high praise as: "masterly interpretation," "wrought magnificently in the realm of enchanted sound."

Soloist for the occasion was Miss Florence Hinkle soprano, whose "magnificent voice, with all its richness and power and splendid range, contributed mightily to a concert that for sheer excellence has not been surpassed in Pittsfield in recent years."

Max Fiedler

* * *

The program began with Weber's Overture from Der Freischutz, followed by Beethoven's Symphony in A major No. 7, Op. 92. The Prelude and "Liebestod" from Tristan and Isolde by Wagner and an aria from "Tosca" by Puccini followed. Wagner's "Tannhauser" Overture was chosen for the finale.

In spite of thunderous applause after each number, the audience had to be content with the printed program. "No encores permitted" was an unbreakable rule governing the orchestra.

Shortly before the concert was over, a thunder storm broke in "all its fury." Hundreds were in evening dress, and ill prepared to face the downpour. Youngsters who were fortunate enough to be on hand "reaped a harvest from their service in going after raincoats and umbrellas and galoshes. The livery men, too, were much in demand and every available rig was pressed into service." The Eagle reported that "many badly damaged gowns were among the results of the storm's visitation."

Berkshire weather could be just as "ornery" fifty years ago as it is on occasion today. People came then as people come now to hear one of the world's greatest orchestras. Since its first visit in 1912, the Boston Symphony has brought close to two million music lovers to this area. With its summer home now at Tanglewood, it has become a permanent Berkshire institution.

—Edna Thomas

Erich Leinsdorf New Boston Symphony Head

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The musical intelligentsia of the Western hemisphere will shortly be facing east to the Mecca of Tanglewood in the Berkshires for the 28th annual outdoor series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group opens its season, July 4, marking the final series of concerts under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, its artistic mentor since 1951.

Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Vienna - born Erich Leinsdorf, former associate in opera and symphonic performances with Toscanini and Bruno Walter. Earlier in the month, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, moderated by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, held a press party for Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which the new permanent conductor was questioned as to the future of the Bostonians in general and Tanglewood, in particular. A digest of Mr. Leinsdorf's series of questions and answers follows:

"This organization shall always hold music uppermost. You can glory in it. It is one of the greatest things. I have made a point of this particularly when I was asked abroad, because in Europe there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States, particularly where the center of decision lies and where musical policy is made. Often the general hostility to the United States takes place in little digs; I found it very useful sometimes to allay certain suspicions best by specific examples and the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people when they heard about them.

QUESTION: It's a little bit beyond, looking farther ahead, but for your first Tanglewood season, in 1963, have you any plans about the Berkshire Music Center?

LEINSDORF: I have a lot of plans and ideas, I am concerned with this very much. I have thought as much about Tanglewood and the educational aspects of it as I have thought about the Boston Symphony season. I really think about it all the time because it is one of the greatest enterprises and I want to continue its building up, it has been spectacularly successful.

QUESTION: Do you anticipate any great changes in the personnel of the Orchestra?

LEINSDORF: No, at the moment, none. We have some retirements and these retirements of course mean some replacements, but at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than these retirements, contemplated.

Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor who will be the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeding Dr. Charles Munch who is retiring following the 1962 Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood.

QUESTION: I didn't read the story myself, but I have heard that you were quoted as saying you didn't intend to stay a great length of time with the Symphony because you were more concerned with opera.

LEINSDORF: I want to know where you read that, because it is certainly entirely to the contrary of what I feel. There comes a moment — look, I think every conductor who has had European training wants to do opera and symphony, because this is the way we were trained. I remember when I was 18 at the Academy in Vienna, I conducted in one year 'Mignon' by Ambroise Thomas and the '7th Symphony' of Bruckner. Now, a greater contrast cannot be found. At the moment I can only say that I think that I want nothing more than to conduct the Symphony. I have had a good fill of opera, I have known its shortcomings, and its lovely sensations. I have enjoyed my stay with it. I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled.

If there is nothing further, I would like to thank you for being so patient with me and please, for these individual conversations, I think Harry S. Beall, press and publicity director, will be the person who would be delighted to have conversations on special problems which you might be interested in exploring. I will be in Boston probably starting just before Labor Day when I take up my residence."

Prior to June 18, ticket orders should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. After that date, orders should be addressed to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass-Telephone Lenox 600.

TIMES-UNIONR Sunday, May 27, 1962 E-11

MUSICAL QUARTERLY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
QUARTERLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUL 1962

CURRENT CHRONICLE

UNITED STATES

Boston

One of the events of the recent Boston Symphony season was the première of Irving Fine's Symphony — 1962. Fine's first work since the Trio of 1957, it is also his most ambitious to date. In a sense it seems to represent a summation of experiences gained from both the Trio and the String Quartet. From the latter, it takes the rhetoric, and the largesse of musical speech; the former seems to have suggested the general formal design. Like the Trio, it is constructed as a triptych: a central scherzo built as a succession of fragments, surrounded by two predominantly slow, and thematically related movements.

The Symphony represents for Fine a further exploration of the use of serial techniques within a firmly tonal idiom. In this case he has worked with two distinct rows. It will be readily seen that Row I (Ex. 1) is composed of two hexachords, each having a marked whole-tone-scale flavor; Row II shows no such element. Certainly, notes 4-7 of Row II reproduce notes 1-4 of Row I in a varied order, but in the context of the work as a whole the difference between the two rows is far more important than the similarities. Inevitably, the melodic substance based on I has a strong whole-tone character, while that based on II provides an opposing intervallic color; the confrontation

Ex. 1

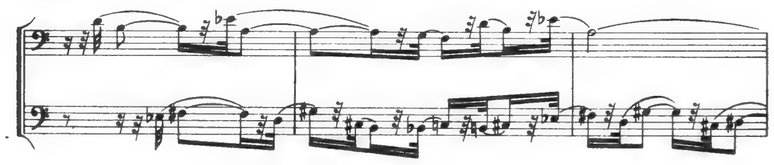
Ex. 2



SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
AUG 16 1962

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 80 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., last Saturday and yesterday 18 of the students in the music classes of the workshop returned to obtain a more intimate look at the music available at Tanglewood.

* * *

SEVERAL MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived earlier than usual for the afternoon rehearsal yesterday in order to talk with the young music students. The group from the Boston symphony included Rosario Mazzeo, clarinet; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and Roger Voisin, trumpet. Voisin invited the students to sit in on a portion of his brass class which was in session when the group arrived on the Tanglewood grounds.

Also available to the workshop students was a lecture by Peter Gram Swing of the Berkshire Music Center's department of listening and analysis. The lecture, held in the Lenox library, was a discussion and demonstration of the music to be played at the Berkshire Festival concerts next weekend.

Students of the Heldeberg Workshop who visited Tanglewood yesterday were in the age group from 10 to 16.

The Heldeberg Workshop, "An Advantage in Learning," was organized by a group of parents in the Voorheesville school district to satisfy, in part, the inquiring minds of their children and to interest them in fields to which they are not ordinarily exposed in school and in the home environment.

CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 27, 1962

Firm to Sell Tanglewood Instruments

Pianos and electronic organs used at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood are finding their way to the market after a summer of use by the stars and future stars of the music world.

The Baldwin instruments, used only during the seven-week festival, are being made available in Schenectady by the Roberts Piano Co., 203 State St.

All types of pianos are used at Tanglewood during performances and rehearsals — spinets, consoles and grands, according to Paul Roberts Jr. of the piano firm.

TIMES-UNIONR Sunday, May 27, 1962 E-11

Erich Leinsdorf New Boston Symphony Head

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The musical intelligentsia of the Western hemisphere will shortly be facing east to the Mecca of Tanglewood in the Berkshires for the 28th annual outdoor series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group opens its season, July 4, marking the final series of concerts under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, its artistic mentor since 1951.

Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Vienna - born Erich Leinsdorf, former associate in opera and symphonic performances with Toscanini and Bruno Walter. Earlier in the month, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, moderated by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, held a press party for Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which the new permanent conductor was questioned as to the future of the Bostonians in general and Tanglewood, in particular. A digest of Mr. Leinsdorf's series of questions and answers follows:

"This organization shall always hold music uppermost. You can glory in it. It is one of the greatest things. I have made a point of this particularly when I was asked abroad, because in Europe there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States, particularly where the center of decision lies and where musical policy is made. Often the general hostility to the United States takes place in little digs; I found it very useful sometimes to allay certain suspicions best by specific examples and the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people when they heard about them.

QUESTION: It's a little bit beyond, looking farther ahead, but for your first Tanglewood season, in 1963, have you any plans about the Berkshire Music Center?

LEINSDORF: I have a lot of plans and ideas, I am concerned with this very much. I have thought as much about Tanglewood and the educational aspects of it as I have thought about the Boston Symphony season. I really think about it all the time because it is one of the greatest enterprises and I want to continue its building up, it has been spectacularly successful.

QUESTION: Do you anticipate any great changes in the personnel of the Orchestra?

LEINSDORF: No, at the moment, none. We have some retirements and these retirements of course mean some replacements, but at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than these retirements, contemplated.

Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor who will be the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeding Dr. Charles Munch who is retiring following the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

QUESTION: I didn't read the story myself, but I have heard that you were quoted as saying you didn't intend to stay a great length of time with the Symphony because you were more concerned with opera.

LEINSDORF: I want to know where you read that, because it is certainly entirely to the contrary of what I feel. There comes a moment — look, I think every conductor who has had European training wants to do opera and symphony, because this is the way we were trained. I remember, when I was 18 at the Academy in Vienna, I conducted in one year 'Mignon' by Ambroise Thomas and the '7th Symphony' of Bruckner. Now, a greater contrast cannot be found. At the moment I can only say that I think that I want nothing more than to conduct the Symphony. I have had a good fill of opera, I have known its shortcomings and its lovely sensations. I have enjoyed my stay with it. I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled.

If there is nothing further, I would like to thank you for being so patient with me and please, for these individual conversations, I think Harry S. Beall, press and publicity director, will be the person who would be delighted to have conversations on special problems which you might be interested in exploring. I will be in Boston probably starting just before Labor Day when I take up my residence."

Prior to June 18, ticket orders should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. After that date, orders should be addressed to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass-Telephone Lenox 600.

MUSICAL QUARTERLY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
QUARTERLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUL 1962

CURRENT CHRONICLE

UNITED STATES

Boston

One of the events of the recent Boston Symphony season was the première of Irving Fine's Symphony — 1962. Fine's first work since the Trio of 1957, it is also his most ambitious to date. In a sense it seems to represent a summation of experiences gained from both the Trio and the String Quartet. From the latter, it takes the rhetoric, and the largesse of musical speech; the former seems to have suggested the general formal design. Like the Trio, it is constructed as a triptych: a central scherzo built as a succession of fragments, surrounded by two predominantly slow, and thematically related movements.

The Symphony represents for Fine a further exploration of the use of serial techniques within a firmly tonal idiom. In this case he has worked with two distinct rows. It will be readily seen that Row I (Ex. 1) is composed of two hexachords, each having a marked whole-tone-scale flavor; Row II shows no such element. Certainly, notes 4-7 of Row II reproduce notes 1-4 of Row I in a varied order, but in the context of the work as a whole the difference between the two rows is far more important than the similarities. Inevitably, the melodic substance based on I has a strong whole-tone character, while that based on II provides an opposing intervallic color; the confrontation

Ex. 1

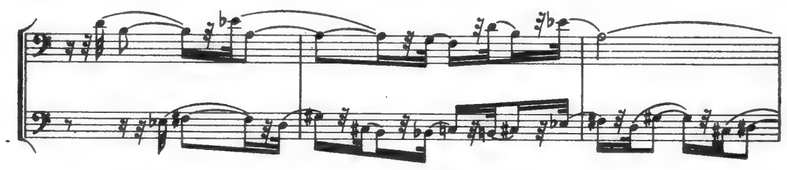
Ex. 2



SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
AUG 16 1962

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 80 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., last Saturday and yesterday 18 of the students in the music classes of the workshop returned to obtain a more intimate look at the music available at Tanglewood.

* * *

SEVERAL MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived earlier than usual for the afternoon rehearsal yesterday in order to talk with the young music students. The group from the Boston symphony included Rosario Mazzeo, clarinet; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and Roger Voisin, trumpet. Voisin invited the students to sit in on a portion of his brass class which was in session when the group arrived on the Tanglewood grounds.

Also available to the workshop students was a lecture by Peter Gram Swing of the Berkshire Music Center's department of listening and analysis. The lecture, held in the Lenox library, was a discussion and demonstration of the music to be played at the Berkshire Festival concerts next weekend.

Students of the Heldeberg Workshop who visited Tanglewood yesterday were in the age group from 10 to 16.

The Heldeberg Workshop, "An Advantage in Learning," was organized by a group of parents in the Voorheesville school district to satisfy, in part, the inquiring minds of their children and to interest them in fields to which they are not ordinarily exposed in school and in the home environment.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 27, 1962

Firm to Sell Tanglewood Instruments

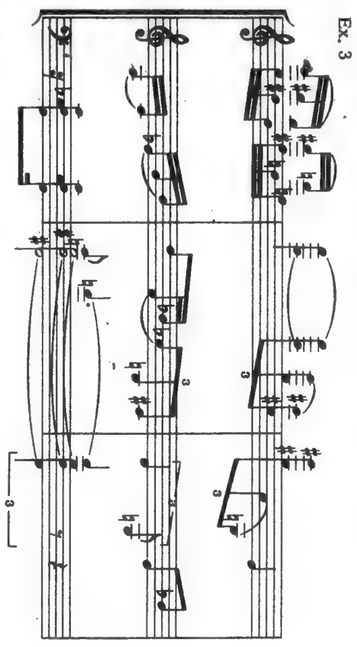
Pianos and electronic organs used at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood are finding their way to the market after a summer of use by the stars and future stars of the music world.

The Baldwin instruments, used only during the seven-week festival, are being made available in Schenectady by the Roberts Piano Co., 203 State St.

All types of pianos are used at Tanglewood during performances and rehearsals — spinets, consoles and grands, according to Paul Roberts Jr. of the piano firm.

of these two traits is a dialectical element in the work. Thus, the first movement begins with a short, sharply profiled theme based on Row I (Ex. 2); Row II dominates the middle section and becomes associated with ideas that are less strictly "thematic" (Ex. 3).

Ex. 3



This opposition is continued in the last movement; the opening is a free fantasy based largely on II, while the introduction of the main theme coincides with a return to Row I (Ex. 4). As the central arch in the general formal scheme, the scherzo stands somewhat apart; it uses Row I for chords and harmonic accompaniment, but also evolves a new subsidiary row of its own.

Ex. 4

I have commented on Fine's serial technique not because a work succeeds or fails by virtue of an abstract plan but because in this case the handling of the rows helps to illuminate Fine's thought. Serialism is, of course, capable of many different uses; in an idiom like Schoenberg's, where the harmony moves rapidly through a wide range of chords, the row and its forms are arranged so as to provide a unifying

167

unday, May 27, 1962 E-11

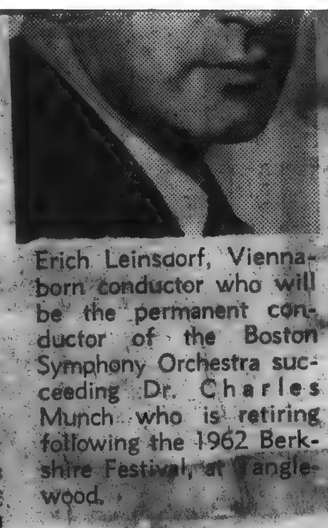
Y

VAIL.

ıvallic background. In a tonally oriented language in which the armony tends to be laid on rather broadly — with frequent ostinati — a Schoenbergian technique would obviously be pointless. For this reason serialism is for Fine not a unifying intervallic underpinning, but rather a method of emphasizing dramatic contrasts; the row arises from melodic impulses, and provides an object for thematic meditation. Many passages seem in fact to be the result of free association suggested by the row; this is particularly true of the long, freely unfolding middle section of the first movement. Actually, the amount of thematic "material" in this symphony is rather slight — a few brief motifs for each movement — and except for the peroration at the end there is little repetition; the forms are filled by association of ideas rather than by conventional methods of thematic variation and development. The brevity of the main thematic material serves incidentally to make the associative passages seem expansive by contrast; this opposition of the clipped motif with the broad extension gives to the work its sense of symphonic scale.

If serial technique has helped to free Fine from conventional thematic procedures, it has also been liberating in a stylistic sense. For a composer who started out within the narrow confines of the neo-Classicism of the forties, serialism provides a powerful incentive for exploration. Certainly, Fine's sources are still in evidence, particularly in some of the Coplandesque gestures of the scherzo, and the Stravinskian evocation of the last movement. But these influences are not restrictive; this symphony is a personal work that strikes out on its own.

MARTIN BOYKAN



Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor who will be the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeding Dr. Charles Munch who is retiring following the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

rection of Dr. Charles Munch, its artistic mentor since 1951.

Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Vienna - born Erich Leinsdorf, former associate in opera and symphonic performances with Toscanini and Bruno Walter. Earlier in the month, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, moderated by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, held a press party for Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which the new ermanent conductor was uestioned as to the future of e Bostonians in general and anglewood, in particular. A gest of Mr. Leinsdorf's series questions and answers fol-rs:

"This organization shall al-ys hold music uppermost. u can glory in it. It is one the greatest things. I have de a point of this partic-rly when I was asked road, because in Europe re is not too much aware-s of what goes on musical-in the United States, par-larly where the center of rsion lies and where musi policy is made. Often the eral hostility to the United es takes place in little ; I found it very useful etimes to allay certain icions best by specific ex-les and the policies of the on Symphony Orchestra been very impressive to t of people when they d about them.

UESTION: It's a little bit nd, looking farther ahead, for your first Tanglewood on, in 1963, have you any s about the Berkshire ic Center?

EINSDORF: I have a lot of s and ideas, I am concern-with this very much. I thought as much about lewood and the educa-l aspects of it as I have ght about the Boston Sym-y season. I really think it all the time because to conduct the Symphony. I have had a good fill of opera, I have known its shortcomings, and its lovely sensations. I have enjoyed my stay with it. I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled.

If there is nothing further, I would like to thank you for being so patient with me and please, for these individual conversations, I think Harry S. Beall, press and publicity director, will be the person who would be delighted to have conversations on special problems which you might be interested in exploring. I will be in Boston probably starting just before Labor Day when I take up my residence."

Prior to June 16, ticket orders should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. After that date, orders should be addressed to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass-Telephone Lenox 600.

replacements, but at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than these retirements, contemplated.

QUESTION: I didn't read the story myself, but I have heard that you were quoted as saying you didn't intend to stay a great length of time with the Symphony because you were more concerned with opera.

LEINSDORF: I want to know where you read that, because it is certainly entirely to the contrary of what I feel. There comes a moment —

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

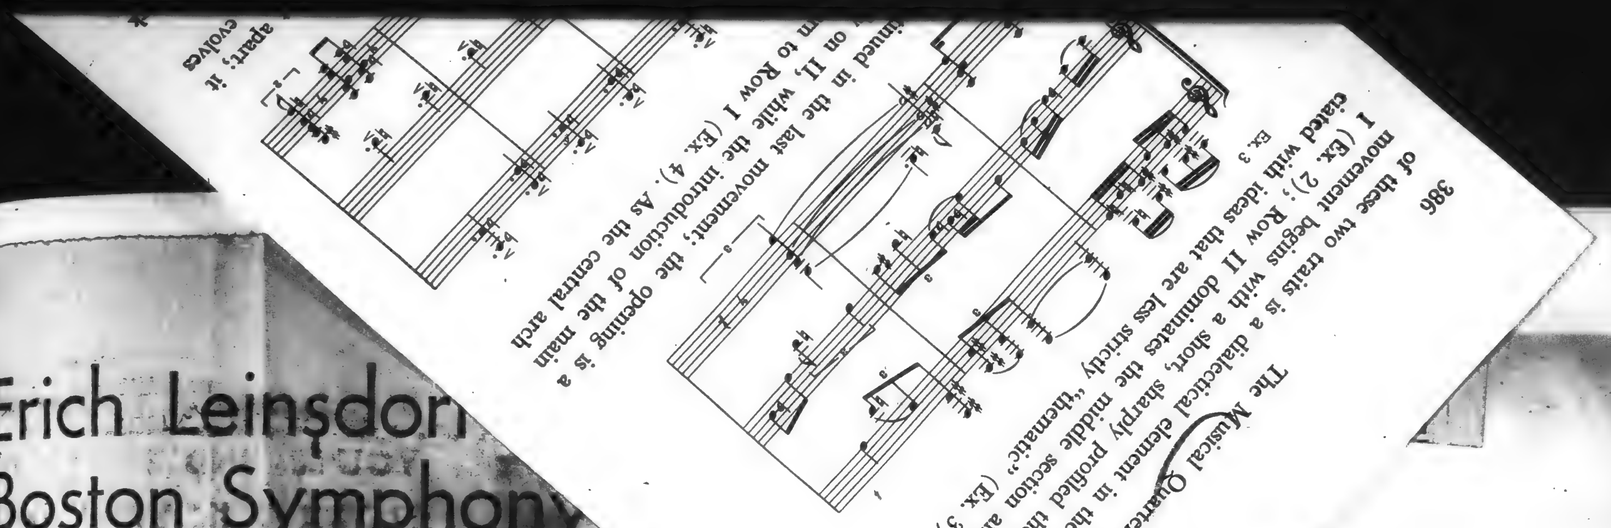
AUG 16 1962

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 80 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston

Workshop who visited Tanglewood yesterday were in the age group from 10 to 16.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER



apart; it evolves

...ained in the last movement; the opening is a ...n to Row I (Ex. 4). As the central arch of these two trains is a dialectical element in the work. Thus, the first movement begins with a short, sharply profiled theme based on Row I (Ex. 2); Row II dominates the middle section and becomes associated with ideas that are less strictly "thematic" (Ex. 3).

386

Ex. 3

The Musical Quarterly

Erich Leinsdorf Boston Symphony

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The musical intelligentsia of the Western hemisphere will shortly be facing east to the Mecca of Tanglewood in the Berkshires for the 28th annual outdoor series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group opens its season, July 4, marking the final series of concerts under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, its artistic mentor since 1951.

Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Vienna - born Erich Leinsdorf, former associate in opera and symphonic performances with Toscanini and Bruno Walter. Earlier in the month, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, moderated by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, held a press party for Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which the new permanent conductor was questioned as to the future of the Bostonians in general and Tanglewood, in particular. A digest of Mr. Leinsdorf's series of questions and answers follows:

"This organization shall always hold music uppermost. You can glory in it. It is one of the greatest things. I have made a point of this particularly when I was asked abroad, because in Europe there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States, particularly where the center of decision lies and where musical policy is made. Often the general hostility to the United States takes place in little digs; I found it very useful sometimes to allay certain suspicions best by specific examples and the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people when they heard about them.

QUESTION: It's a little bit beyond, looking farther ahead, but for your first Tanglewood season, in 1963, have you any plans about the Berkshire Music Center?

LEINSDORF: I have a lot of plans and ideas, I am concerned with this very much. I have thought as much about Tanglewood and the educational aspects of it as I have thought about the Boston Symphony season. I really think about it all the time because it is one of the greatest enterprises and I want to continue its building up, it has been spectacularly successful.

QUESTION: Do you anticipate any great changes in the personnel of the Orchestra?

LEINSDORF: No, at the moment, none. We have some retirements and these retirements of course mean some look, I th... who has had ... ing wants to ... symphony, because ... way we were trained. ... ber when I was 18 ... Academy in Vienna, I cond... ed in one year 'Mignon' b... Ambroise Thomas and the ... 7th Symphony of Bruckner. Now, a greater contrast cannot be found. At the moment I can only say that I think that I want nothing more than to conduct the Symphony. I have had a good fill of opera, I have known its shortcomings and its lovely sensations. I have enjoyed my stay with it. I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled.

Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor who will be the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeding Dr. Charles Munch who is retiring following the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

If there is nothing further, I would like to thank you for being so patient with me and please, for these individual conversations, I think Harry S. Beall, press and publicity director, will be the person who would be delighted to have conversations on special problems which you might be interested in exploring. I will be in Boston probably starting just before Labor Day when I take up my residence."

Prior to June 16, ticket orders should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. After that date, orders should be addressed to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass-Telephone Lenox 600.

replacements, but at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than these retirements, contemplated.

QUESTION: I didn't read the story myself, but I have heard that you were quoted as saying you didn't intend to stay a great length of time with the Symphony because you were more concerned with opera.

LEINSDORF: I want to know where you read that, because it is certainly entirely to the contrary of what I feel. There comes a moment — intervallic background. In a tonally oriented language in which the harmony tends to be laid on rather broadly — with frequent ostinati — a Schoenbergian technique would obviously be pointless. For this reason serialism is for Fine not a unifying intervallic underpinning, but rather a method of emphasizing dramatic contrasts; the row arises from melodic impulses, and provides an object for thematic meditation. Many passages seem in fact to be the result of free association suggested by the row; this is particularly true of the long, freely unfolding middle section of the first movement. Actually, the amount of thematic "material" in this symphony is rather slight — a few brief motifs for each movement — and except for the peroration at the end there is little repetition; the forms are filled by association of ideas rather than by conventional methods of thematic variation and development. The brevity of the main thematic material serves incidentally to make the associative passages seem expansive by contrast; this opposition of the clipped motif with the broad extension gives to the work its sense of symphonic scale.

If serial technique has helped to free Fine from conventional thematic procedures, it has also been liberating in a stylistic sense. For a composer who started out within the narrow confines of the neo-Classicism of the forties, serialism provides a powerful incentive for exploration. Certainly, Fine's sources are still in evidence, particularly in some of the Coplandesque gestures of the scherzo, and the Stravinskian evocation of the last movement. But these influences are not restrictive; this symphony is a personal work that strikes out on its own.

MARTIN BOYKAN

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

AUG 16 1962 Buffalo

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 30 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., last Saturday and yesterday 15 of the students in the music classes of the workshop returned to obtain a more intimate look at the music available at Tanglewood.

* * *

SEVERAL MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived earlier than usual for the afternoon rehearsal yesterday in order to talk with the young music students. The group from the Boston symphony included Rosario Mazzeo, clarinet; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and Roger Voisin, trumpet. Voisin invited the students to sit in on a portion of his brass class which was in session when the group arrived on the Tanglewood grounds.

Also available to the workshop students was a lecture by Peter Gram Swing of the Berkshire Music Center's department of listening and analysis. The lecture, held in the Lenox library, was a discussion and demonstration of the music to be played at the Berkshire Festival concerts next weekend.

Students of the Heldeberg Workshop who visited Tanglewood yesterday were in the age group from 12 to 16.

The Heldeberg Workshop, "An Advantage in Learning," was organized by a group of parents in the Voorheesville school district to satisfy, in part, the inquiring minds of their children and to interest them in fields to which they are not ordinarily exposed in school and in the home environment.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 27, 1962

Firm to Sell Tanglewood Instruments

Pianos and electronic organs used at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood are finding their way to the market after a summer of use by the stars and future stars of the music world.

The Baldwin instruments, used only during the seven-week festival, are being made available in Schenectady by the Roberts Piano Co., 203 State St.

All types of pianos are used at Tanglewood during performances and rehearsals — spinets, consoles and grands, according to Paul Roberts Jr. of the piano firm.

198

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JUL 9 1962

Music at Marlboro and Tanglewood

Distinguished Conducting By Casals and Munch

By Louis Chapin

Two New England festivals got under way this weekend—at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, and at Marlboro, Vermont. They have a lot in common.

First, each has been built on the educative power of the best music among young people, envisioned originally by Serge Koussevitzky in one case and by Rudolf Serkin, with members of the Busch and Moyse families, in the other.

Second, each attracts its various-sized summer weekend and vacation crowds as they look for some music in their scenery.

Third, each provides plenty of rolling, forested scenery with its music.

Fourth (to come down to cases), this weekend each offered a performance of Bach's Third Suite under distinguished and seasoned conductors. And they could each boast distinguished visitors: Governor John A. Volpe at one (to honor Charles Munch for his 13 years with the Boston Symphony), and Queen Elisabeth of Belgium at the other.

♪ ♪ ♪

There may be some at Marlboro who wonder (and even worry) whether the festival there isn't getting too near to Tanglewood's bigness. Yesterday afternoon's concert, at which Pablo Casals conducted, was held in the half-completed Marlboro College auditorium, and there was a big jump in attendance. Even though still at a fraction of Tanglewood audiences, might the friendly intimacy of previous summers be lost?

It might, of course.

But the big, pitch-roofed, wooden-skinned auditorium was above all like a country grange hall, bustling and congenial, even with its air of European gentility. And what music it contained and cherished, itself like an instrument! With such an abundance of quality, size could be no cause for fear.

The Bach came first, and it came rolling majestically — as indeed it had at Tanglewood. But once into the middle allegro of the Overture, there was a shaping of the fugal entrances; it was pliable in the way of chamber music. The Suite was generally bright, filled with responsive discipline. Even its familiar Air was lithe and strong rather than delicate. It was all remarkably new music.

And so were the two Beethoven works that completed the program. The Fourth Piano Concerto brought on Mr. Serkin as soloist, and among his hundreds I wonder if he has ever felt or given a more satisfactory performance. The first movement opens with a quiet chordal statement in the solo; and when Mr. Serkin, near the movement's end, returned to these chords with towering conviction, it was only the natural outcome of an affirmative conception welcomed and obeyed by all participants.

The second movement was likewise even more than usually absorbing as a dramatic interplay between orchestra and piano. The angry stalking of the orchestral entrance, met by the imperturbable serenity of the solo; the coming to terms (after a bit of demonstrative indulgence by the piano) in mutual tranquility; nothing was new—and yet so much was new, because newly realized. The Casals-Serkin embrace, at the end, was that of old friends who have rediscovered each other.

Then came the Pastorale symphony, again fresh, not only in its colors but in its limber delineations. This fine orchestra, blending imperceptibly its seasoned with its younger members, responded quickly to Mr. Casals' continuous concern with the phrasing and balance—and no one minded that some of the concern was expressed audibly (there had been a kind of vocal duet during the concerto) or that the conductor rose from his chair at intervals to attend to certain passages more forcefully. The cellos (with Leslie Parnas as principal) seemed notably sensitive in performance — yet why shouldn't they be, conducted by this legendary cellist?

♪ ♪ ♪

The perennial objections to "tired" repertoire, legitimately raised concerning many festivals and winter seasons, are resolved in the face of such performances as these. One found oneself, yesterday in Marlboro, on a kind of second honeymoon with this music—one found oneself renewing the vows. The auditorium, resonant and cool, still has $30,000 worth of "winterizing" to be done; but it has already been consecrated.

And how about Tanglewood, where two Bach programs were heard, plus a student program of chamber music? Did its festival, more than twice as old, suffer by this quick weekend comparison?

In certain ways, yes—in others, no.

The Boston Symphony, which is taking leave this summer of Dr. Munch as its regular conductor, is a superb instrument, unquestionably capable of the greater virtuosity. Yet only at certain points did its programs measure up to the almost unmitigated interest of the Marlboro concert.

On Friday evening these were some transcendent points:

● Doriot Anthony Dwyer's eloquent, unpretentious flute playing in the Second Suite in B minor, with special chamber-music intimacy in the Polonaise variation, where she was balanced with Samuel Mayes as cellist.

● The phenomenal brilliance and lyricism of Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist in the cantata, "Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen." This singer's wide experience with contemporary music style evidently sharpens the accuracy and musicality of her Bach.

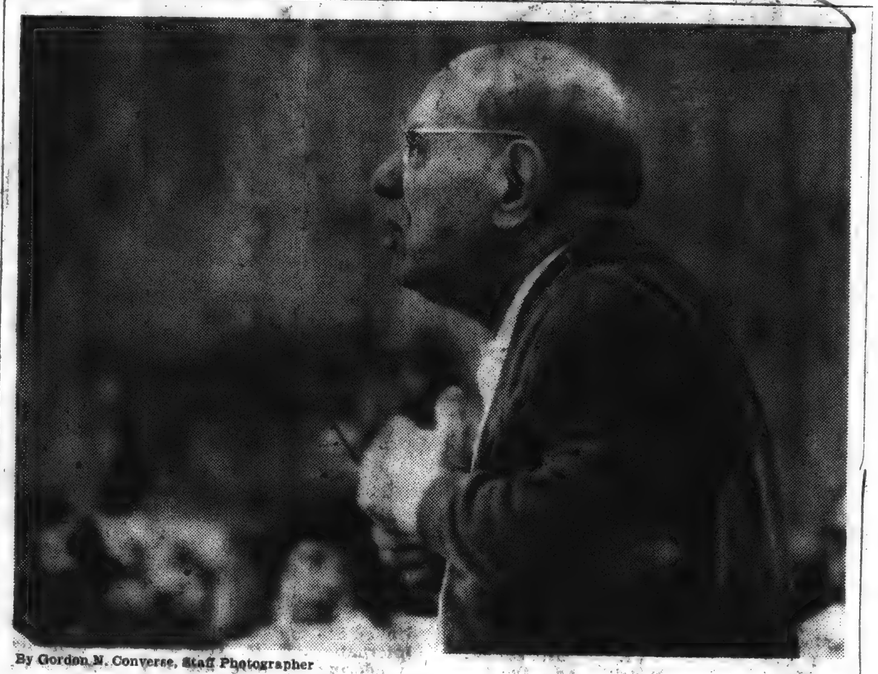
● The pianism, in the Concerto in C major, of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. Their sensitively underlined playing of the slow movement more than justified the shift to these un-baroque instruments after the previous sound of Daniel Pinkham's harpsichord.

● The relative unfamiliarity of the Fourth Suite, in D major, with its moments of dark color among the brightness.

On Saturday there were more such points: The slow movement of the Sixth Brandenburg Concerto, where the violin-less strings entered into the most intimate range of meaning; Lukas Foss's dynamism and elegance in the D-minor "Piano" Concerto (the allegros, however, still want the harpsichord's focus).

In the Air of the Third Suite, to compare with Mr. Casals' lightness, there was Dr. Munch's slower, delicate inwardness, speaking lingeringly. Each was right for its conductor and its human context.

It may be that in the Sunday morning chamber music concert the educative spirit of Tanglewood came nearest to meeting that of Marlboro—and, as it included the wonderfully viable Nonet for Brass of Wallingford Riegger, offering a reminder that new music of quality, joined with "old" music freshly explored, add up to vital experience for young musicians—and their audiences—anywhere.



By Gordon N. Converse, Staff Photographer

Pablo Casals conducting a rehearsal session of the Marlboro Festival Orchestra

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Circ. 8,196

SEP 4 1962

TV Cable System To Carry Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood Concert with Charles Munch in his final appearance before retiring as conductor will be carried tonight by Boston Channel 2, and will be available to Claremonters on the Cable system.

William R. Roberts, manager of the Claremont Cable Co., said today that from 8:30 p.m. on the concert over Channel 2 will be carried instead of Channel 11 programs.

The program, on tape, includes Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (with the Tanglewood Chorus) and Copeland's The Quiet City.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175

AUG 24 1962

ANDY BROWN, son of Dr. and Mrs. A. S. Brown of Waterbury, is one of 11 guides at the Tanglewood Music Festival at Lenox, Mass. this summer. Young Brown, shown at the information booth inside the Glass House at the Main Gate of Tanglewood, has been conducting visitors through the grounds of Tanglewood and assisting with the many duties of the staff in aiding the thousands of visitors to the spacious grounds and the buildings of the Festival and Music School. A graduate of Harvard University and Medical School student at the University of Rochester, Brown, and the other college men who compose the staff of guides, are housed at Windsor Music Camp on the campus of the Windsor Mountain School a short distance from Tanglewood. —Whitestone Photo

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ENTERPRISE
August 24, 1962

WORKSHOP GROUP VISITS TANGLEWOOD — Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops and conductor of the Symphony Hall Youth Concerts of the Boston Symphony, talks to members of the music group of the Heldeberg Workshop outside the music shed at Tanglewood. Members of the class seated (from left) are: Charles Bednarczak of Guilderland, David Kling, Earl Parshall and Kathy Rowe of Voorheesville. Standing are: Billy Glider of Voorheesville, Gregg Stinson of Guilderland, and Sandy Cox of Voorheesville. (See "Heldeberg Workshop" Feature page in this issue of the Enterprise).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, August 11, 1962

Tanglewood Will Host 22 Area Students

Twenty-two students of the Summer Music Program of Troy High School went to Tanglewood today to attend the open rehearsal of Rameau's Dardanus Suite, Fine's Symphony (written in 1962) and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 (Pathetique).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra performed under the direction of Charles Munch.

Supervising the trip was John F. Zaffuts, chairman of music in the Troy Public School System.

The summer session at Troy High School includes General Music III, Arranging, Theory, instrumental work and piano classes. The first course includes a detailed study of 12 outstanding works and their composers. There is also art and literature correlation. Composers are studied in periods.

Several students are studying compositional arranging. Each is preparing an arrangement for the ensemble.

The theory includes solfeggio, harmony, melodic dictation and harmonic dictation, and keyboard harmony. There are both advanced and elementary classes in theory.

In the Instrumental program under the direction of J. Edward Sewell, beginners are taught the fundamentals and class instrument training is given.

There is also a laboratory band of approximately 30 students, both advanced and beginning.

Several of the advanced instrumental students are studying different instruments.

There are four groups of piano class instruction. These are proparatory courses intended to create an interest in the piano.

EAST AURORA, N.Y.
ADVERTISER
W 3,790
AUG 23 1962

ATTENDING MUSIC CENTER — Sheila and Dennis Kain of 233 Sycamore St. are attending the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Music center officials believe they are the first sister and brother to enroll together at the 20-year-old school.

EAST AURORA, N.Y.
ADVERTISER
W 3,790
AUG 23 1962

East Aurora Brother And Sister Attend Summer Music Center

Sheila and Dennis Kain, students at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the summer school of music operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are believed by music center officials to be the first sister and brother to have been enrolled together at the 20-year-old school.

The Kains live at 233 Sycamore St., East Aurora, and are attending the full eight weeks of the music center's session. Dennis is a tympanist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, which presents weekly concerts under the direction of student conductors.

His sister, Sheila, is a member of the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus, which have performed several times this summer in the Berkshire Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 29 1962

Tourist Trade

Business Ahead of 1961 Tanglewood Season Longer

Tourist trade in Berkshire County is up this summer. At least one expert is saying the one-week extension of the Tanglewood season has had a marked effect on business.

Hotels, motels, summer theaters and other tourist attractions all report business is good this summer, showing a big pick-up in August after a slow July.

The Williamstown Summer Theater reports an increase of between 25 and 30 per cent. A spokesman credited a broader selection of plays and the theater's growing reputation.

Williamstown's Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute set a one-day attendance record Aug. 11 when 1,119 visited the museum.

Attendance at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge is up over last season's which was the best in 10 years.

The young People's Concerts at South Mountain Music Hall are drawing well and are expected to keep doing so throughout the fall.

Becket's Jacob's Pillow reports business about the same as last year.

In Lenox, the Music Barn says its business is ahead of last summer's by about a fifth.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, attributes much of the tourist success of the season to the extension from seven to eight weeks of the Tanglewood season.

200

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 17 1962

Gifts Support Tanglewood Scholarships

LENOX—The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center make attendance possible for many young musicians who would otherwise have to miss the unique opportunity provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer school of music at Tanglewood.

In these days of increasing costs in education both student and orchestra turn to the Friends for funds to enable students to continue their musical educations in such ideal surroundings as those which are provided by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

The Berkshire Music Center is dependent upon two principal sources of income—the tuition from students who are able to pay, and gifts from those who become Friends of the center.

Of the 270 students enrolled this summer more than 60 per cent receive full tuition grants, and of these a large number are provided with board and dormitory accommodations. Very few of the remaining 40 per cent are able to meet the full extent of the Music Center's fees.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are people who believe in the ideals and the work of the Music Center and contribute to its support.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trustees, made this statement in a letter to the Friends earlier this year: "The school is made up of two groups, the young professionals who hope to become composers, conductors or instrumentalists, and the amateurs, semi-professionals, and just plain music lovers . . . most of the first group, who are attending or have just graduated from music conservatories, are unable to pay tuition and must be granted scholarships . . ."

The Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund is the main source of aid to the Berkshire Music Center. It was started in 1949 with a series of gifts from RCA Victor, and is chiefly maintained through the support of the Friends.

Serge Koussevitzky, late music director of the Boston Symphony, for years cherished the dream that somewhere, somehow, there could be established a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians from all over the world.

Equally important was the thought that these students should train at the proposed music school under professional conditions. Since the realization of Koussevitzky's dream with the establishment of the Berkshire Music Center by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, it has been the practice for the students to take part in nearly 40 concerts, lectures, seminars and forums before public audiences made up of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Through these performances the students are aiding themselves, since the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund is in large measure maintained by the Friends. A voluntary gift constitutes membership in the Friends.

In appreciation of their contributions, members are invited to the events which the students participate in each season.

Two events other than the concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the student performances which enhance the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are the Boston Pops at Tanglewood program, which took place Aug. 2, and the forthcoming Gala Evening Thursday.

The latter event is the culmination of student performances as each department of the Music Center presents a concert in the program beginning at 4 p. m.

Scheduled for this year's Gala Evening are student program of chamber music, choral music by the Tanglewood Choir, music composed by the Tanglewood composers, and a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and Festival Chorus which will be devoted to Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3.

Richard Burgin will conduct the student orchestra, and Florence Kopleff, an alumna of the Music Center, will be soloist. For this performance Miss Kopleff has contributed her services for the benefit of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D- 40,554
AUG 11 1962

Tanglewood Will Host 22 Area Students

Twenty-two students of the Summer Music Program of Troy High School went to Tanglewood today to attend the open rehearsal of Rameau's Dardanus Suite, Fine's Symphony (written in 1962) and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 (Pathetigue).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra performed under the direction of Charles Munch.

Supervising the trip was John G. Zaffuts, chairman of music in the Troy Public School System.

The summer session at Troy High School includes General Music III, Arranging, Theory, Instrumental work and piano classes. The first course includes a detailed study of 12 outstanding works and their composers. There is also art and literature correlation. Composers are studied in periods.

Several students are studying compositional arranging. Each is preparing an arrangement for the ensemble.

The theory includes solfeggio, harmony, melodic dictation and harmonic dictation, and keyboard harmony. There are both advanced and elementary classes in theory.

In the Instrumental program under the direction of J. Edward Sewell, beginners are taught the fundamentals and class instrument training is given.

There is also a laboratory band of approximately 30 students, both advanced and beginning.

Several of the advanced instrumental students are studying different instruments.

There are four groups of piano class instruction. These are preparatory courses intended to create an interest in the piano.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
AUG 13 1962

Jake Jacobson's

Under the Sun

WHAT! NO STRAVINSKY?

It would be easy to generalize about the programming at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this summer.

But it would also be foolish and dangerous.

One could say there has been very little basic variation in the concert material presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its outdoor setting over a large number of recent years and still be on safe ground.

One would still be on safe ground if he pointed out there is very basic difference between concerts of the orchestra in Symphony Hall in Boston during the winters and those at Tanglewood in the summers.

However, those two points do not concern me now.

I glanced at this year's program at Tanglewood the other day but the glance soon gave way to an intensive study of same program.

Do you know what I found?

For the eight weekends of the summer concert series there was not one work by Igor Stravinsky included.

There is not one composition by Stravinsky slated for hearing at any one of the eight Fridays, eight Saturdays or eight Sundays in the shed, which concerts have the widest appeal of any of the activities at Tanglewood.

But why all the fuss about n Stravinsky?

Well aside from the musica value of presenting at least one just one work, by Stravinsky, thi summer marked an importan birthday in the composer's life

In June Stravinsky became 8 years old.

He has been called a "mu sician's musician and while minor composers drift hither and yon in the public's mind today, Stravinsky's place in history seems secure.

His "Le Sacre du Printemps" translated Rites of Spring, has been described as being to this century what the Beethoven Ninth was to the 19th century.

It would have been truly appropriate if Berkshire could have had some rites of its own this summer in honor of the man.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
SEP 2 1962

Tanglewood: Big Business Or Music?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Festival Mushrooms at Alarming Pace

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Last year at this time we inquired about the direction of The Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood. Will it become increasingly commercialized Big Business or a coterie pace-setter, presenting refined but less 'popular' programs?

The problem is not peculiar to the Berkshires, being confronted indeed by almost any artistic organization enjoying a modicum of success. It is still largely unresolved at Tanglewood.

$546,894.50

The 1962 season was not typical in the sense that it marked the end of Dr. Charles Munch's tenure as music director of the orchestra, and was therefore designed to honor one man's achievement rather than define the future role of these concerts.

Even so, the trend of recent years remained unabated: Tanglewood picked up patronage and cash. The annual statistics have just been released, and in accordance with the unwritten rule that every cultural festival must tangibly demonstrate an improvement over the year before in various statistical departments, they relate a twice-told tale.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra first played at the Berkshire Festival in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totalling 15,000. The 1961 Berkshire Festival attracted more than 200,000 in seven weeks.

The 1962 Festival, extended from seven to eight weeks (which increased the number of concerts by the chamber orchestra from six to nine; the chamber music (Wednesdays) from seven to eight the Open Rehearsals from seven to eight) the 1962 Festival attracted 217,642 paid attendances, and took in $546,894.50.

How Much To Music?

Judging from such figures and the trend, it would appear that Tanglewood—barring cataclysm in the economy or some other disaster—is going to be Big Business whether anyone likes it or not. It is mushrooming at a pace of violence like a self-generating force.

No doubt we may consider the increase a favorable sign. Popularity is not innately a destructive element. If thousands of people come to a concert, even if their motives are sometimes non-musical, we may assume this healthier than if they stayed away. But what is disturbing involves the possible effect of popularity on standards.

How much does the Berkshire Festival, aside from its educational activities, mean to music? It is simply good sense to make as much money out of it as possible at a time when support for symphony orchestras must come on a broad public basis rather than out of the pockets of a relatively few patrons.

There is always the danger, however, that the Festival can slide into musical negligibility owing to a concentration on boxoffice.

For the role of the Berkshire Festival still is undefined. Not since the earliest Koussevitsky days has it been especially distinguished by innovation. Now it appeals to the advance guard, now to the broad mass, now it wavers indecisively. True, the chamber concerts and student productions often produce surprising results and high standards. Still there is reason for doubt.

The queries of last year remain pertinent. As the Festival extends its season to eight weeks, as the concerts mount in public favor, as the boxoffice shows that classical music pays its way, can the fete, quite simply, afford to maintain minority standards?

Is the Festival successful if it pleases the public rather than the professionals of music? (And it might be.) Certainly the visitor cannot escape an impression of carnival, the impression that a large chunk of the audience consists of rollicking vacationers, although the audience is generally discreet and attentive.

The answers to such questions lie in the hands of the incoming conductor, Mr. Leinsdorf.

Meanwhile, the statistics for 1962 break down specifically to 117,000 attending the Shed concerts alone against 124,000 last year—bad weather making the difference—but a total of 174,000 at the Festival Concerts (138,000 last year) and 15,000 at the Benefits as against 14,000 in 1961. Tanglewood is still at the crossroads.

CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
FROM NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

VERMONT ENTERPRISE
August 24, 1962

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 80 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 11 and 18 of the students in the music classes of the workshop returned Aug. 15 to obtain a more intimate look at the music available at Tanglewood.

Several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived earlier than usual for the afternoon rehearsal in order to talk with the young music students. The group from the Boston symphony included Rosario Mazzeo, clarinet; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and Roger Voisin, trumpet. Voisin invited the student to sit in on a portion of his brass class which was in session when the group arrived on the Tanglewood grounds.

Also available to the workshop students was a lecture by Peter Gram Swing of the Berkshire Music Center's department of listening and analysis. The lecture, held in the Lenox library, was a discussion and demonstration of the music to be played at the Berkshire Festival concerts next weekend.

Students of the Heldeberg Workshop who visited Tanglewood were in the age group from 10 to 16.

The Heldeberg Workshop, "An Advantage in Learning," was organized by a group of parents in the Voorheesville school district to satisfy, in part, the inquiring minds of their children and to interest them in fields to which they are not ordinarily exposed in school and in the home environment.

PALM BEACH, FLA.
NEWS
D- 3,905 S. 4,007

SEP 7 1962

Musical Giant

The quality which distinguishes Charles Munch is his spontaneity. He never cast music into a mold. In his long 13-year reign as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from which he is now retiring, he has seemed never to play the same piece twice in the same way. He is fired by the emotion of the moment. This made him almost unique in a world of musical personalities who stamp their brand on their music.

His sense of the freshness of the moment often caused the most professional and informed listeners to say they heard sounds and structures in familiar music that they never heard before. And in those special moments in the concert hall when men and moods conspire, Dr. Munch could whip music into white heat and overwhelm musicians and audjence with its greatness.

As a man he never enjoyed the limelight for its own sake. Those who have been close to him know how retiring and modest is his nature. He is not a showman. The men and women of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a genuine affection for him, in part because he chose the path of colleague and director rather than tyrant in finding his way through the age-old dilemma of how to weld many individualists and professionals into a unit. If this turned the discipline back to the men themselves, Munch could counter by stepping to the podium and hurling them into the unexpected.

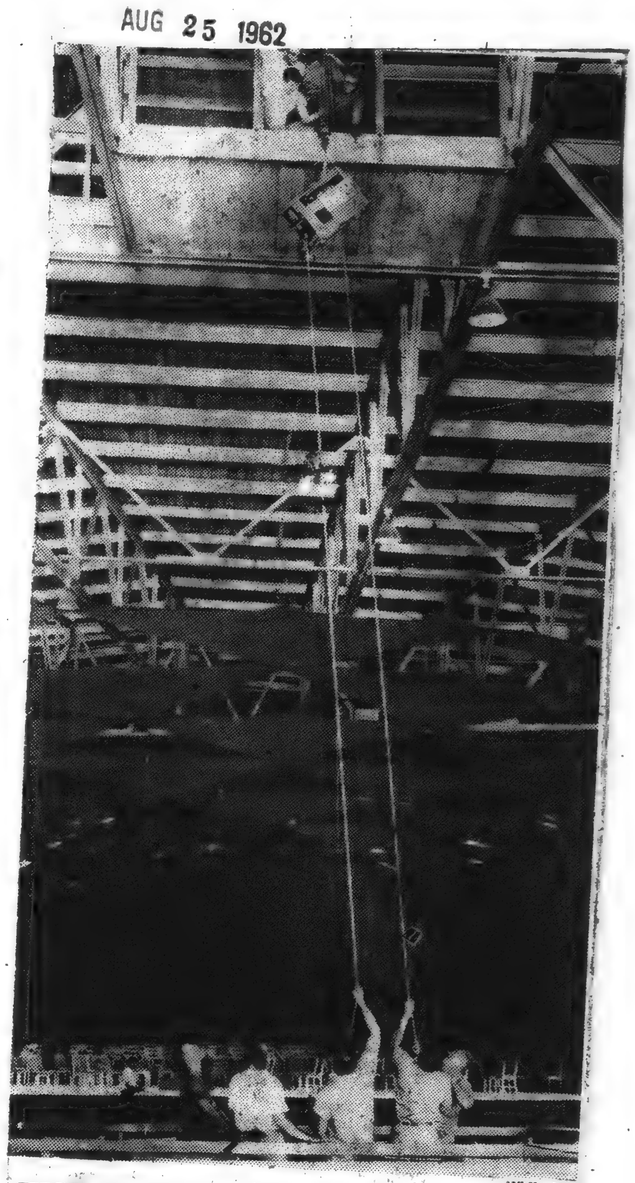
He conducted the French repertoire better than anyone else. This was his bent. But he could attack German music with his own particular excitement, and he paid more scrupulous attention to contemporary composers than he was sometimes given credit for. This despite the fact that innovation requires much longer hours of studying scores than is generally recognized.

Dr. Munch is now looking forward to the international phase of his career appearing as guest conductor in many parts of the world. But he was an international figure already. One of the few giants.—CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 25 1962



Whitestone

HIGH IN THE SHED at Tanglewood a camera is hoisted to a specially made platform to televise for the first time Sunday a complete Berkshire Festival program. The video-taped program will be shown at 8:30 p.m. on Sept. 2 by WGBH-TV, the educational television station in Boston.

Last Concert To Be Taped For Boston TV Broadcast

The complete program of a Tanglewood concert will be televised at Sunday afternoon's concert for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearances at the Berkshire Festival which started in 1936.

The concert, which will mark Dr. Charles Munch's last as music director of the BSO, will be videotaped by WGBH-TV, the educational television station in Boston. The program will be shown by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, on Sept. 4 at 8:30 p.m.

A mobile taping unit is serving as the base for the TV operations. Four camera positions will be utilized by the staff. Two will be on the sides of the Music Shed and above the stage. Another will be located in the chorus and the fourth will be operated on a platform high above the audience over the box section.

Jordan M. Whitelaw is the producer and David Davis the director in charge of this initial telecast of a Berkshire Festival concert, which will open with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." The major work to be performed is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 24 1962

Willard Clark To Retire As Music Critic

Willard Mather Clark, 68, of 187 Florida Ave., Springfield, music critic for The Springfield Union and The Springfield Sunday Republican, will officially retire from the music writing field Sept. 1. He wrote his first review more than 40 years ago.

Clark's retirement will bring an end to a career that spanned the early days of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and its later developmenut as well as the development of the Tanglewood concerts. He had reviewed concertes by many noted personalities including Caruso, Mme. Schumann-Heinke, Lauritz Melchoir, Fritz Kreisler, Isaac Stern, Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, George Gershwin and Marian Anderson.

Clark was born in Deerfield, July 23, 1894, and spent his boyhood in Williamstown where he attended grammar school. He attended Mount Pleasant Military Academy in Ossining, N.Y. and the Univ. of Pennsylvania. During World War I he served as a sergeant in the Army Medical Corps in France. After the war Clark studied voice in Paris until 1921 when he returned to the United States to begin his newspaper career with The Union as music writer and critic.

Clark is retiring because of ill health.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

SEP 1 1962

Letters

More Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I must oppose Mr. Cebula's letter of Aug. 30 in which he says that the Tanglewood concerts do not rate the space given by your paper. On the contrary, it is regrettable that the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra or a similar endeavor cannot be continued here the year round, for it is such things as great music, architecture, drama and the allied arts that make for a more satisfying life.

This is what attracts many thousands to our Berkshire and, contrary to Mr. Cebula's thinking, also brings in money that is well spread about, not taken away.

The trouble with our world is that it is starved for cultural nourishment. We have become too greedy for our own benefit. This machine age has made push-button robots of all of us. We are but another bolt in a mad machine that rumbles over and crushes the very utopia we are seeking. Let's not toss out the finer things in life.

Tanglewood's attendance records are evidence of the earth-shaking, soul-stirring power of a great symphony orchestra that nothing else could hope to approach. It is this greatness that only a symphony orchestra has that many thousands come to experience. I don't believe we could attract those same thousands by substituting the juke boxes in our barrooms.

EDWIN STACHE.

Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 28 1962

BSO Gives $500 To 'Splendid' Lenox Fire Dept.

LENOX — Oscar R. Hutchinson, Lenox fire chief, announced today receipt of a $500 contribution to the Lenox Fire Department from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In transmitting the check, James J. Brosnahan, Tanglewood business administrator, told Mr. Hutchinson: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra realizes the Lenox Fire Department is maintained by the real estate tax which we pay on our Tanglewood property plus the other taxes collected by the Town of Lenox. Your service to us in protecting the Tanglewood property is well above the service one would normally expect. For this reason we enclose the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., check for $500 to help maintain this splended organization. Please accept it with our sincere gratitude."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 3 1962

Around Berkshire

BSO Gives Fire Department $500

LENOX—Oscar R. Hutchinson, Lenox fire chief, has announced receipt of a $500 contribution to the Lenox Fire Department from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In transmitting the check, James J. Brosnahan, Tanglewood business administrator, told Mr. Hutchinson: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra realizes the Lenox Fire Department is maintained by the real estate tax which we pay on our Tanglewood property plus the other taxes collected by the town of Lenox. Your service to us in protecting the Tanglewood property is well above the service one would normally expect. For this reason we enclose the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc. check for $500 to help maintain this splendid organization. Please accept it with our sincere gratitude."

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALTAMONT ENTERPRISE
Friday, August 24, 1962

Workshop Students Hear Rehearsal of Symphony

A group of 80 members of the Heldeberg Workshop attended the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 11 and 18 of the students in the music classes of the workshop returned Aug. 15 to obtain a more intimate look at the music available at Tanglewood.

Several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived earlier than usual for the afternoon rehearsal in order to talk with the young music students. The group from the Boston symphony included Rosario Mazzeo, clarinet; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and Roger Voisin, trumpet. Voisin invited the student to sit in on a portion of his brass class which was in session when the group arrived on the Tanglewood grounds.

Also available to the workshop students was a lecture by Peter Gram Swing of the Berkshire Music Center's department of listening and analysis. The lecture, held in the Lenox library, was a discussion and demonstration of the music to be played at the Berkshire Festival concerts next weekend.

Students of the Heldeberg Workshop who visited Tanglewood were in the age group from 10 to 16.

The Heldeberg Workshop, "An Advantage in Learning," was organized by a group of parents in the Voorheesville school district to satisfy, in part, the inquiring minds of their children and to interest them in fields to which they are not ordinarily exposed in school and in the home environment.

PALM BEACH, FLA.
NEWS
D. 3,905 S. 4,007

SEP 7 1962

Musical Giant"

The quality which distinguishes Charles Munch is his spontaneity. He never cast music into a mold. In his long 13-year reign as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from which he is now retiring, he has seemed never to play the same piece twice in the same way. He is fired by the emotion of the moment. This made him almost unique in a world of musical personalities who stamp their brand on their music.

His sense of the freshness of the moment often caused the most professional and informed listeners to say they heard sounds and structures in familiar music that they never heard before. And in those special moments in the concert hall when men and moods conspire, Dr. Munch could whip music into white heat and overwhelm musicians and audience with its greatness.

As a man he never enjoyed the limelight for its own sake. Those who have been close to him know how retiring and modest is his nature. He is not a showman. The men and women of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a genuine affection for him, in part because he chose the path of colleague and director rather than tyrant in finding his way through the age-old dilemma of how to weld many individualists and professionals into a unit. If this turned the discipline back to the men themselves, Munch could counter by stepping to the podium and hurling them into the unexpected.

He conducted the French repertoire better than anyone else. This was his bent. But he could attack German music with his own particular excitement, and he paid more scrupulous attention to contemporary composers than he was sometimes given credit for. This despite the fact that innovation requires much longer hours of studying scores than is generally recognized.

Dr. Munch is now looking forward to the international phase of his career appearing as guest conductor in many parts of the world. But he was an international figure already. One of the few giants.—CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 25 1962

HIGH IN THE SHED at Tanglewood a camera is hoisted to a specially made platform to televise for the first time Sunday a complete Berkshire Festival program. The video-taped program will be shown at 8:30 p.m. on Sept. 2 by WGBH-TV, the educational television station in Boston. Whitestone

Last Concert To Be Taped For Boston TV Broadcast

The complete program of a Tanglewood concert will be televised at Sunday afternoon's concert for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearances at the Berkshire Festival which started in 1936.

The concert, which will mark Dr. Charles Munch's last as music director of the BSO, will be videotaped by WGBH-TV, the educational television station in Boston. The program will be shown by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, on Sept. 4 at 8:30 p.m.

A mobile taping unit is serving as the base for the TV operations. Four camera positions will be utilized by the staff. Two will be on the sides of the Music Shed and above the stage. Another will be located in the chorus and the fourth will be operated on a platform high above the audience over the box section.

Jordan M. Whitelaw is the producer and David Davis the director in charge of this initial telecast of a Berkshire Festival concert, which will open with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." The major work to be performed is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 24 1962

Willard Clark To Retire As Music Critic

Willard Mather Clark, 68, of 187 Florida Ave., Springfield, music critic for The Springfield Union and The Springfield Sunday Republican, will officially retire from the music writing field Sept. 1. He wrote his first review more than 40 years ago.

Clark's retirement will bring an end to a career that spanned the early days of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and its later development as well as the development of the Tanglewood concerts. He had reviewed concertes by many noted personalities including Caruso, Mme. Schumann-Heinke, Lauritz Melchoir, Fritz Kreisler, Isaac Stern, Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, George Gershwin and Marian Anderson.

Clark was born in Deerfield, July 23, 1894, and spent his boyhood in Williamstown where he attended grammar school. He attended Mount Pleasant Military Academy in Ossining, N.Y. and the Univ. of Pennsylvania. During World War I he served as a sergeant in the Army Medical Corps in France. After the war Clark studied voice in Paris until 1921 when he returned to the United States to begin his newspaper career with The Union as music writer and critic.

Clark is retiring because of ill health.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

SEP 1 1962

Letters

More Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I must oppose Mr. Cebula's letter of Aug. 30 in which he says that the Tanglewood concerts do not rate the space given by your paper. On the contrary, it is regrettable that the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra or a similar endeavor cannot be continued here the year round, for it is such things as great music, architecture, drama and the allied arts that make for a more satisfying life.

This is what attracts many thousands to our Berkshire and, contrary to Mr. Cebula's thinking, also brings in money that is well spread about, not taken away.

The trouble with our world is that it is starved for cultural nourishment. We have become too greedy for our own benefit. This machine age has made push-button robots of all of us. We are but another bolt in a mad machine that rumbles over and crushes the very utopia we are seeking. Let's not toss out the finer things in life.

Tanglewood's attendance records are evidence of the earth-shaking, soul-stirring power of a great symphony orchestra that nothing else could hope to approach. It is this greatness that only a symphony orchestra has that many thousands come to experience. I don't believe we could attract those same thousands by substituting the juke boxes in our barrooms.

EDWIN STACHE.

Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

AUG 28 1962

BSO Gives $500 To 'Splendid' Lenox Fire Dept.

LENOX — Oscar R. Hutchinson, Lenox fire chief, announced today receipt of a $500 contribution to the Lenox Fire Department from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In transmitting the check, James J. Brosnahan, Tanglewood business administrator, told Mr. Hutchinson: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra realizes the Lenox Fire Department is maintained by the real estate tax which we pay on our Tanglewood property plus the other taxes collected by the Town of Lenox. Your service to us in protecting the Tanglewood property is well above the service one would normally expect. For this reason we enclose the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., check for $500 to help maintain this splended organization. Please accept it with our sincere gratitude."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 30 1962

Around Berkshire

BSO Gives Fire Department $500

LENOX—Oscar R. Hutchinson, Lenox fire chief, has announced receipt of a $500 contribution to the Lenox Fire Department from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In transmitting the check, James J. Brosnahan, Tanglewood business administrator, told Mr. Hutchinson: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra realizes the Lenox Fire Department is maintained by the real estate tax which we pay on our Tanglewood property plus the other taxes collected by the town of Lenox. Your service to us in protecting the Tanglewood property is well above the service one would normally expect. For this reason we enclose the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc. check for $500 to help maintain this splendid organization. Please accept it with our sincere gratitude."

202

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN DAILY
Thursday, July 12, 1962

Sunday At NF Tanglewood

L. to R.: Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Rudolf Serkin, world-famous pianist, discuss a question of interpretation of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto which Serkin will play at Tanglewood on Sunday, August 5. This concert has been chosen for the sixth annual excursion "Sunday at Tanglewood" sponsored by the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, July 13, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
N. Y. JOURNAL AMERICAN
Wednesday, July 25, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
EAST AURORA ADVERTISER
Thursday, August 23, 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
JUL 9 1962 Buffalo
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BULLETIN
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUL 12 1962 Buffalo
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
JUL 25 1962 Buffalo
RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050
JUL 12 1962 Buffalo
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
JUL 9 1962 Buffalo
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200
AUG 3 1962 Buffalo
1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
JUL 23 1962 Buffalo
1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900
JUL 12 1962 Buffalo

Academy Offers a Sunday Excursion to Tanglewood

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will sponsor its sixth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion on Aug. 5. The jaunt includes round trip transportation, a picnic lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserved seat inside the Music Shed for the Sunday Matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch, who is conducting most of the Tanglewood performances during his last season as music director of the Bostonians, will be on the podium. The soloist will be the world-famous pianist, Rudolf Serkin, who will play Beetoven's Concerto No. 5 in E flat (the "Emperor"). The program will open with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and will also include Bohuslav Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6), which was commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and which is dedicated to Dr. Munch.

Messrs. Munch (left) and Serkin

Buses will leave from Manhattan at 8:30 A.M. that Sunday. It is expected that they will arrive at Tanglewood around noon, and that the excursionists will return to the city by 10 P.M. The cost of the trip is $12, with a one-dollar reduction granted to Academy members for the 1962-1963 season.

Further details may be obtained by telephoning the Academy at ST 3-6700.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

SEP 9 1962

203

Music

Springfield Reviewer R

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

The dean of New England music critics has retired after more than 40 years' reviewing. Willard M. Clark ended his career on Sept. 1 as music critic for the Springfield Union and the Springfield Sunday Republican.

His last review was of the concluding concert at Tanglewood on Sunday, Aug. 26. The performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with mixed chorus and soloists, also marked the retirement of Charles Munch as regular conductor of the orchestra and Richard Burgin as its concertmaster.

Clark's health has not been good for several months and his eyesight had failed to a point that he was forced to dictate his last reviews in the Tanglewood press room.

Familiar Hero

During most of his career, Clark has been a familiar figure at the Worcester Music Festival. At the 1927 festival in Mechanics Hall, Clark shared press facilities with such critics as Olin Downes of the New York Times; H.T. Parker, Boston Transcript; L.A. Sloper, Christian Science Monitor, and Pierre V. R. Key, guest critic for the Worcester Evening Gazette.

Clark was visibly and audibly impressed when he attended his first Worcester Festival in the new Municipal Auditorium in 1933.

He was amazed by the maze of corridors. "I was lost several times," he said. "What a magnificent building this is. Springfield folks have heard about it, but they haven't any idea. No sir, they haven't any idea."

Clark attended the Monday night concert of the 1961 festival to hear soprano Joan Sutherland.

He has been one of the most respected members within the profession of music criticism. Though not an indiscriminate advocate of contemporary music, he listened attentively and with an open mind to all new music, appraising it with fairness and honesty.

Thousands of concertgoers in the Springfield area will continue to enjoy seeing Clark at musical events. They will no doubt be as eager to hear his now private opinions as they have been in reading his astute judgments for more than four decades.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ALTAMONT ENTERPRISE
Friday, August 24, 1962

Behind The Scenes At Tanglewood

Wednesday afternoon the music group from Heldeberg Workshop went to Tanglewood. This was a very special occasion since the group was to mingle informally with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to sit in on part of the closed rehearsal.

The group was accompanied by Edgar VanOlinda, local music critic, who has been going to Tanglewood concerts for 28 years. He charmed the children with bits of information on the organization and purpose of Tanglewood, as well as many personal stories from his own experience.

The boys and girls and adults were thrilled to hear part of the chorus rehearse for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony to be presented at the closing performance.

Mr. Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops and conductor of the Symphony Hall Concerts of the Boston Symphony for young people, spoke to the children outside the music shed, answered questions and told them something of the activities for youth in which he was engaged. The rehearsal bell sounded and he was called away, but the group was privileged to hear Mr. Kirchner conducting his own composition, "Sinfonia." Everyone found this extremely exciting, and it was with reluctance that they went back to the cars to return home.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 19 1962

Objections Heard to Inn Permit

Board's Decision Withheld Until Applicant Advised

LENOX—Following a public hearing last night at which nine persons objected to a petition by Fred R. Selch of New York City for an innkeeper's permit for his property on West Street, the Planning Board decided on the issue but withhold announcement of the decision until the applicant is informed.

About 35 persons attended the hearing, held in the Grange room at the Town Hall. Mr. Selch sought the permit for his property at 214 West St., across from the Tanglewood main entrance.

He bought the property last December from Frank A. Dunbar for an estimated $36,000. The 12-room house and 50 acres of land have been operated for Selch by Michael Bakwin, owner of Avaloch Inn, as a guest house and Tanglewood parking lot.

Kennedy Quotes Bylaw

The property is in a residential zone. As reviewed by John D. Kennedy, chairman of the Planning Board, at the opening of the hearing, the town bylaws state that such property may be used for a hotel or inn under certain conditions. The Planning Board is permitted to authorize such use provided the board determines at a public hearing that the proposed use is not injurious, noxious or offensive to the neighborhood. Issuance of a permit involves no change in the zone designation of the district and is renewable on a year-to-year basis.

As explained by Mr. Bakwin, the only change sought in the operation of the property is that, in addition to the lodging already provided, there would be "a small snack bar, seating about 30 people." Mr. Bakwin and Mr. Selch both stated there were no plans to feed the guests lodged there. They would continue to eat either at Avaloch or some other local restaurant.

Charles R. Alberti Jr., Avaloch's attorney, explained that this minor change would involve no change in the external appearance of the Dunbar house except repainting.

Mr. Bakwin said that if Lenox expects to engage in tourist trade, the town will have to resign itself to providing tourist services. He added that there is a need for a food place which does not serve alcohol and is convenient to Tanglewood.

Objectors Heard

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, expressed that organization's opposition to any further encroachment in the area by commercial enterprises. He stressed the importance of the surrounding environs to a successful artistic endeavor.

The Rev. Lawrence Langguth, S.J., rector of Shadowbrook, said he was "concerned" that the issuance of a permit might start a trend which would destroy the scenic attractions of the area.

John D. Hatch, president of the Stockbridge Bowl Association and a neighbor, argued that once the permit is granted, the town has little control over property changes that might detract from the area's beauty.

Kelton M. Burbank, Pittsfield attorney, representing John H. P. Gould of Mahkeenac Farm, argued that the noise level, which is already disturbing, would become intolerable. He said Mr. Gould felt he had a right to expect the town to protect the residential character of the area and had maintained his property in that expectation.

Henry Edwards, an employe at Mahkeenac Farm, also spoke of the noise level. He claimed it already kept him from sleeping.

J. M. Harding, recent purchaser of a summer place in the area, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, who lives at Seranac, just west of Avaloch, both expressed concern with the possibility that a new commercial operation would damage the rural environment.

A woman who identified herself as Mrs. Lewis of Louisville, Ky., a frequent visitor to the area, said the proposed operation would diminish the area's effectiveness. George A. Turain, owner-manager of the Curtis Hotel, said he was neither "for or agin'" the petition. He went on to state, however, that Mr. Bakwin might die tomorrow and there was no guarantee that the next manager would not embark on construction plans which would uglify the area.

204

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

AUG 26 1962

CLASSES FOR YOUNG CONDUCTORS—Many bright student conductors from around the world, like Satoko Takemae of Tokyo (above), learn the fine points which make the difference between a brilliant pupil and a true professional under the guidance of a master such as Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood Tutelage Tops

Globe 8/26/62

School for Virtuosos

By IAN FORMAN

That southern slope of the Berkshires called Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, has long been a Summer idyl.

Its upcountry wilderness, its July and August sunshine filtered onto stretches of lawn have inspired creativity in many forms.

★ ★ ★

Discovered by Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne in the mid-1800's as a stimulating spot, it flourished for a number of years as a pleasant retreat for writers and thinkers.

Today the dramatic focus is on music—some of the best in the world produced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

But the world-famous Boston Symphony did something unusual for a symphony orchestra.

It founded a school—the only one of its kind attached to such a musical organization anywhere.

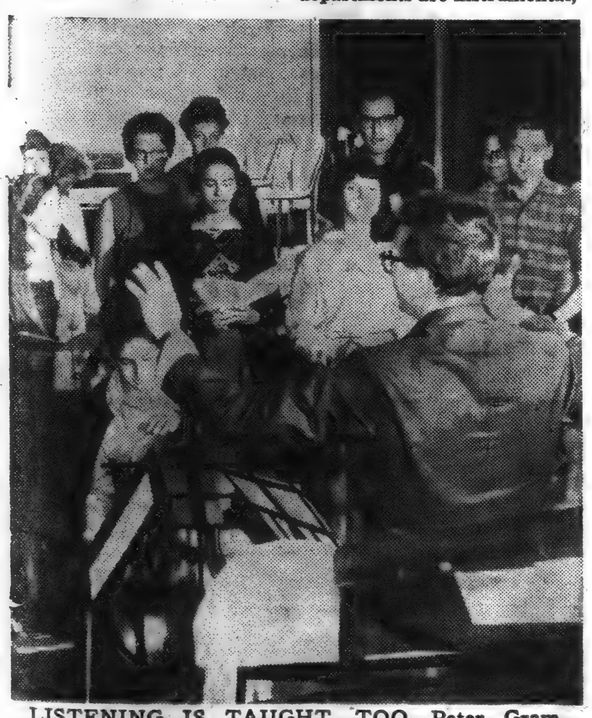
This school aims to turn brilliant students into "young professionals."

It's not for beginners, but it's still vital because "there's a real jump from a top student to a professional musician," as one Boston Symphony player put it.

★ ★ ★

Under the tutelage of top-ranked musicians, a younger generation of Leonard Bernsteins and so on, learn the fine points of professionalism—the final, deft touches—so difficult to find under any other circumstances.

Where else can you find a staff and faculty with such names as Charles Munch (director), Aaron Copeland, Richard Burgin, Lukas Foss, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Peter Gram Swing and advisers like Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky, and Isaac Stern.



LISTENING IS TAUGHT, TOO—Peter Gram Swing, conducts class for listening and analysis of music at Berkshire Music Center for students, teachers and music enthusiasts.

About half the staff are Boston Symphony members, with others being added as the school has grown since 1940.

The young people who come to savor the Berkshire Music Center's rare experience are among the top future musicians of the world, arriving from about 20 nations each year.

These brilliant youthful composers, conductors, instrumentalists and singers are drawn from France, Mexico, Hawaii, Japan, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria, Finland, Iran, Israel, Holland, Brazil, Greece, Argentina, Chile, Puerto Rico and a larger handful from Canada.

Many will become outstanding conductors of symphonies throughout the world, working now under Eleazar de Carvalho, who heads the orchestra and conducting department, and others in the past such as Leonard Bernstein, still close to the center.

★ ★ ★

A school "for living and working in music" is the way its founder, the late Serge Koussevitzky, former Boston Symphony conductor, saw the young institution's mission.

Housed in both rustic sheds and the fine old buildings of the Hepburn-Tappan "Tanglewood" estate, whose gift made the symphony's Summer home possible, young composers can be inspired and instructed by the likes of Copeland, Foss, Iain Hamilton and Witold Lutoslawski, all recognized composers in their own right.

The Berkshire center's five departments are instrumental, choral, composition, opera (not offered this year), and the Tanglewood Study Group, primarily for the amateur, teacher or music enthusiast.

PROFESSIONAL'S POINTERS—In a chamber music class at Berkshire Music Center, Joseph de Pasquale (right), first viola player for Boston Symphony Orchestra, helps polish techniques of Won-Mo Kim of Korea (left) and Jacques Sudrat of Paris.

Courses and sessions run from two to eight weeks, with tuition going up to $300 plus other expenses, but scholarships, grants and fellowships are available, with numerous foreign students coming this way.

★ ★ ★

Now in its 20th year (four years were missed during World War II), this unique school is the result of happy circumstances.

After the graceful, 210-acre estate with its own Lake Mahkeenac was given to the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky saw a chance to fulfill a longtime dream of his.

His musicians were relatively free, except for weekend Festival concerts. The estate afforded spacious grounds and buildings. Only the idea and initiative were needed..

So clear was the concept in Dr. Koussevitzky's mind that it has since been unchanged (despite his death later in 1950) though the school has expanded.

He formed student orchestras and a selected group of young conductors, whom the noted man coached and who led the orchestras under his direct supervision.

Three hundred pupils from all points came the first year, and this summer the total is well over 400, despite the quality aspect of the program.

Later other departments were added and new buildings erected, sometimes with the help of Ford Foundation and other grants.

What Tanglewood, its concerts and school, now stand for is a focus of culture in New England comparable to the famous European music festivals, set in a pastoral scene and alive with the artistry and enthusiasm of both famous musicians and brilliant students.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158
AUG 21 1962

Friends Make Possible Unique Summer School

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center make it possible for many young musicians, who would otherwise have to miss the unique opportunity provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer school of music at Tanglewood, to study at this famed school.

In these days of increasing costs in education both student and orchestra alike turn to the Friends for funds to enable students to continue their musical educations in such ideal surroundings as those which are provided by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

The Berkshire Music Center is dependent upon two principal sources of income-the tuition from students who are able to pay, and gifts from those who elect to become Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Of the 270 students enrolled this summer more than 60 per cent receive full tuition grants, and of these a large number are provided with board and dormitory accommodations. Very few of the remaining 40 per cent are able to meet the full extent of the Music Center's fees.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are people who believe in the ideals and the work of the Music Center and contribute to its support. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra's trustees, made this statement in a letter to the Friends earlier this year: "The school is made up of two groups, the young professionals who hope to become composers, conductors or instrumentalists, and the amateurs, semi-professionals, and just plain music lovers. . .most of the first group, who are attending or have just graduated from music conservatories, are unable to pay tuition and must be granted scholarships . . ."

The Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund is the main source of aid to the Berkshire Music Center. It was started in 1949 through a series of gifts from RCA Victor, and is chiefly maintained through the support of the Friends.

Serge Koussevitzky, late music director of the Boston Symphony, for years cherished the dream that somewhere, somehow, there could be established a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians from all over the world. Equally important was the thought that these students should train at the proposed music school under professional conditions. Since the realization of Koussevitzky's dream with the establishment of the Berkshire Music Center by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, it has been the practice for the students to take part in nearly 40 concerts, lectures, seminars and forums before public audiences made up of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Through these performances the students are aiding themselves, since the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund is in large measure maintained by the Friends. A voluntary gift constitutes membership in the Friends. In appreciation of their contributions, members are invited to the events in which the students participate each season. The office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is located at the Main Gate at Tanglewood, and donations are received there or by mail to the Friends Office, Tanglewood, Lenox.

Two events other than the concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the student performances which enhance the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are the Boston Pops at Tanglewood program, which took place on August 2, and the forthcoming Gala Evening on August 23.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

207

Tucumán, Lunes 5 de Setiembre de 1960 Bs. Aires 363

El Centro Musical de Verano de los E. Unidos

Especial Para NOTICIAS • Escribe el Dr. Adolfo A. Critto

En las sierras de Berkshire, Massachussets, en un hermoso parque de césped alternado de coposos árboles, y enmarcado en un panorama de lomas, a un lado, y el agua tranquila de un lago al otro lado, un espectáculo inusitado se presenta ante los ojos y oídos del visitante en las cálidas tardes y noches de verano.

Allí uno de los conjuntos musicales más famosos del mundo —la Orquesta Sinfónica de Boston— tiene su residencia de verano; sus conciertos, alternados con los de la orquesta Boston Pops y solistas o conjuntos musicales de elevada jerarquía, constituyen el Berkshire Festival, en el citado parque denominado Tanglewood, que se ha convertido así en el centro del peregrinaje musical de verano en los EE. UU., frecuentemente comparado con Salzburgo en Austria.

La circunstancia de reunirse allí tantos valores musicales durante el verano, ha dado fuerza a la idea de permitir a jóvenes de talento aprovechar esta circunstancia ideal, y se creó una escuela de verano "for living and working in music" en la que los estudiantes presencian los ensayos y desarrollan su talento musical con la colaboración de los eminentes músicos allí reunidos. El director de la Facultad es el conocido compositor norteamericano Aaron Copland. Los estudiantes forman asimismo una orquesta. Se concede beca a extranjeros (compositores, cantantes, directores de orquesta, etc.), y en un reciente verano, por ejemplo, hubo 32 extranjeros venidos de 22 países (entre ellos Argentina) sobre un total de 420 estudiantes.

Vista general de las instalaciones exteriores, playas de estacionamiento, zona urbanizada adyacente y campos lindantes, de bellezas panorámica.

Aspecto parcial del escenario y del auditorium del Centro Musical, Berkshire, Mass., cuyo complejo arquitectónico es sencillamente sorprendente.

Después de haber visto nuestros conciertos en el Teatro Odeón (o San Martín) en Tucumán, y en las Operas de París, Viena, Praga, Berlín, así como en los salones de conciertos de Londres o en la Scala de Milán o en el Gran Auditorium en la Exposición Universal en Bruselas, no puede menos que sorprender esta nueva experiencia musical en el "Salzburgo de los EE. UU.". En efecto, por un lado esa combinación de naturaleza y arte produce una de las impresiones más agradables accesibles al hombre en este campo: El suave murmullo del viento en el follaje de los árboles hacía de salvaje y dócil marco a Rimski Korsakow y Tchaicowsky, y el lago, los árboles, el césped, las lomas y el cielo daban un toque de encanto natural a esa reunión artística, donde el viento mezclaba la naturaleza con la obra del hombre. En tal respecto, fue una impresión parecida al Festival Internacional del Ballet en los hermosos parques de Nervi, en las noches estivales del año pasado.

Pero lo que más me llamó la atención en este festival artístico norteamericano, es el público: por primera vez vi asistir a un concierto —¡y a un concierto de este nivel!— gentes en short y mangas de camisa, cuando no en mallas de baño, recostados sobre colchas extendidas sobre el césped, y haciendo allí pic-nics antes del concierto, y tomando sol mientras la orquesta ejecutaba. Bajo la bóveda que cobija a la orquesta, 6.000 espectadores escuchaban sentados, pero también en mangas de camisa, y a veces en shorts, soleras, etc., como quien va a la playa. El resto, como dije, se sentaba o recostaba en el parque que rodea la bóveda, bajo los árboles o bajo el sol, de acuerdo al gusto de cada uno. No se crea que a pesar de los cientos o miles de pic-nics allí realizados, se dejaron desperdicios o papeles sobre el césped después de terminado el concierto. Este público, vestido de un modo tan democrático, se dirige —al terminar el concierto— en riadas a tomar sus modernos automóviles para alejarse del lugar. Otro hecho notable: el público aplaudía entre los diferentes tiempos de un mismo concierto o sinfonía, y el famoso director (Mr. Pierre Montewx) condescendiente, esperaba con paciencia y aún los acompañaba con movimientos de cabeza, en el último movimiento de la 5ª Sinfonía de Tchaicowski, gran parte del público aplaudió equivocadamente mientras la orquesta ejecutaba.

Esto contrasta grandemente con los elegantemente vestidos asistentes a los conciertos europeos o argentinos, que después se alejan de la sala caminando o en tranvías, y generalmente se cuidan de aplaudir entre tiempos de una obra musical.

Los estudiantes de música interesados pueden dirigirse solicitando informes de programas, condiciones y becas, a: "Berkshire Music Center. Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachussets".

BLANK PAGE

210

POST-SEASON

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
AUG 29 1962

...00, the company said.

217,642 AT BERKSHIRE

LENOX, — The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival attracted 217,642 persons who paid $546,895 for tickets, the Boston Symphony Orchestra reported yesterday. This compared with attendance of 210,438 and ticket receipts of $533,136 in 1961 when the season lasted seven weeks instead of eight.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
AUG 29 1962

217,642 Attended Berkshire Festival

LENOX (UPI)—The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival attracted 217,642 persons who paid $546,895 for tickets, the Boston Symphony Orchestra reports.

This compared with attendance of 210,438 and ticket receipts of $533,136 in 1961 when the season was seven weeks in length instead of eight this year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 29 1962

Tanglewood Ends 27th Year

Festival Has Multiplied 14 Fold Since Founding

Statistical Report of Year's Musical Events in Lenox Reads Like a Season at Carnegie Hall

LENOX—The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood wound up its 27th season Sunda ywith a impressive score: 217,642 persons paid $546,894.50 to attend 42 public events in eight weeks.

Four Days in 1936

It was Dr. Charles Munch's 12th year as director of the festival and his final year as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When the Boston Symphony first played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000. The 1961 Berkshire Festival in seven weeks attracted more than 200,000 people.

The Berkshire Festival in 1963 will open July 5 and continue for eight weeks. The Berkshire Music Center will be in session from June 30, 1963, until Aug. 28, 1963.

This season the full Boston Symphony Orchestra presented 15 concerts on five week ends; a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony presented three concerts of the music of Bach and six of the music of Mozart on the first three week ends of the Berkshire Festival.

Guest Conductors

Charles Munch conducted the nine Bach-Mozart concerts and eight concerts with the full orchestra.

Among his guest conductors were Pierre Monteux (four concerts), Eugene Ormandy (two concerts), and William Steinberg. Three composers, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss, and Leon Kirchner conducted their own compositions.

Charles Munch in a personal tribute to the Orchestra invited 11 players of the Boston Symphony to appear as soloists. These included Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Samuel Mayes, Joseph Silverstein, Louis Speyer, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Other soloists who appeared at the 1962 Berkshire Festival concerts included (in order of appearance): Bethany Beardslee, Lukas Foss, Virginia Babikian, Evelyn Saks, Nico Castel, David Clatworthy, Claude Frank, Ruth Posselt, Vronsky and Babin, Evelyn Crochet, Phyllis Curtin, Florence Kopleff, Blake Stern, Mac Morgan, Byron Janis, Rudolf Serkin, Leon Fleisher, Eugene Istomin, Adele Addison, Gary Graffman, John McCollum and Donald Gramm.

Contemporary Composers

Composers whose work were heard at the 15 concerts by the full orchestra include Beethoven (8), Brahms (5), Debussy (3), Berlioz (2), Prokofiev (2), Ravel (2), Tchaikovsky (2), and one composition each by Bartok, Bruckner, Copland, Elgar, Fine, Foss, Haieff, Handel, Hindemith, Honegger, Kirchner, Martinu, Mendelssohn, Piston, Saint-Saens, Schubert, Strauss, Wagner and Weber.

Participants in the eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts included the Boston Arts Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, New York Pro Musica, Marlboro Orchestra directed by Alexander Schneider, with Rudolf Serkin, pianist; Boston Arts Quartet, New York Chamber Soloists, Beaux Arts Trio, Nova Arte Trio assisted by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and Gary Graffman, and the Kroll Quartet.

Two of these programs, the Boston Arts Quartet's second program and the New York Chamber Soloists, were presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation.

In addition to the New York Pro Musica's program of early Renaissance music, composers represented at these concerts included Vivaldi (3, Marlboro Orchestra), Mozart (4), Beethoven (3), Haydn (2), Brahms (2), Babbitt, Bartok, Berger, Carter, Diamond, Powell, Prokofiev, Schoenberg, Schuller, Stockhausen, Webern.

270 Students

Concurrently with the Berkshire Festival the Boston Symphony Orchestra maintains the Berkshire Music Center, its summer school of music at Tanglewood. The session this summer has been the 20th since the Music Center was founded in 1940—two years were omitted during the war.

Richard Burgin was acting chairman of the faculty, replacing Aaron Copland, who was on leave of absence. Two hundred and seventy students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
AUG 30 1962

Tanglewood Tallies Up

A report released by the Boston Symphony Orchestra reveals that 217,642 persons attended the eight-week 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

This compares with 210,438 persons during the seven-week season last summer. The 1962 box office total was $546,894 against $533,136 for 1961.

The most frequently performed composer was Beethoven. His music was played at eight of the 15 concerts in which the full orchestra appeared. Brahms was the runner-up.

Eleven members of the symphony appeared as soloists in this 12th and final festival under the supervisiion of Charles Munch.

Guest conductors were Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteux and William Steinberg. Three composers, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss and Leon Kirchner, conducted their own compositions.

When the Boston Symphony first played at the Berkshire Festival in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000. The 1963 festival will open July 5 and continue for eight weeks.

The report indicated a drop in membership of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer school of music at Tanglewood. This year's membership was 3,533. There were 4,027 members last year.

Contributions from members of the Friends group dropped to $25,240 from the $33,357 total last year.

The music center's alumni contributed $5,110 to the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. Contributions were received from 106 graduates.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
AUG 29 1962

FESTIVAL RETURNS RISE

Lenox, Mass. — (UPI) — The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival attracted 217,642 persons who paid $546,895 for tickets, the Boston Symphony Orchestra reported yesterday. This compared with attendance of 210,438 and ticket receipts of $533,136 in 1961 when the season lasted seven weeks instead of eight.

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D. 61,500 S 73,339

SEP 16 1962

A summary report of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, the Boston Symphony's summer school of music at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., shows that once again the festival increased its figures over last year.

During the eight weeks of the 1962 season, 217,642 were in attendance, with the total ticket sales reaching $546,894.50. Last years figures were 210,438 in attendance for 7 weeks, and a total intake of $533,136.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 29 1962

Attendance at Tanglewood 8 Weeks Reaches 217,642

Attendance at Tanglewood during the eight weeks of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival reached a record 217,642, it was announced today by the Boston Symphony Orchestra management in a recapitulation of the season.

This figure for the eight-week season compared with 210,438 in last year's seven-week season. The extension of the festival to eight weeks this year permitted several additional performances.

15 Concerts

The 15 concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed attracted 117,134, which is 9,244 fewer than the 126,378 registered last year. But the three Bach concerts by members of the orchestra drew 14,502 this year compared with 13,429 in 1961, and six Mozart concerts which the extended season made possible were attended by 32,585 compared with the 13,502 who attended the three Mozart programs by BSO members in 1961.

Open rehearsals by the orchestra, the proceeds going to the orchestra pension fund, attracted 28,080 this year compared with 26,675 last season. Two benefit performances — the Boston Pops Concert and the Gala Evening program — were attended by 15,099 compared with 14,429 last year. In 1961, a special concert directed by Danny Kaye attracted 6,300. There was no comparable attraction in 1962.

Ticket sales this year amounted to $546,894.50. Last year's take was $533,136.

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra presented 15 concerts on five weekends and a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony presented three concerts of the music of Bach and six of the music of Mozart on the first three weekends of the Berkshire Festival. Charles Munch conducted the nine Bach-Mozart concerts and eight concerts with the full orchestra. Among his guest conductors were Pierre Monteux (four concerts), Eugene Ormandy (two concerts), and William Steinberg. Three composers, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss, and Leon Kirchner conducted their own compositions.

Tribute To Orchestra

Munch, in a tribute to the orchestra, invited 11 players of the Boston Symphony to appear as soloists. These included: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Samuel Mayes, Joseph Silverstein, Louis Speyer, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt. Other soloists who appeared at the 1962 Berkshire Festival concerts included in order of appearance, Bethany Beardslee, Lukas Foss, Virginia Babikian, Evelyn Saks, Nico Castel, David Clatworthy, Claude Frank, Ruth Posselt, Vronsky and Babin, Evelyn Crochet, Phyllis Curtin, Florence Kopleff, Blake Stern, Mac Morgan, Byron Janis, Rudolf Serkin, Leon Fleisher, Eugene Istomin, Adele Addison, Gary Graffman, John McCollum and Donald Gramm.

Composers whose works were heard at the 15 concerts by the full orchestra include: Beethoven (8), Brahms (5), Debussy (3), Berlioz (2), Prokofiev (2), Ravel (2), Tchaikovsky (2), and one composition each by Bartok, Bruckner, Copland, Elgar, Fine, Foss, Haieff, Handel, Hindemith, Honegger, Kirchner, Martinu, Mendelssohn, Piston, Saint-Saens, Schubert, Strauss, Wagner and Weber.

Participants in the eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts included the Boston Arts Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, New York Pro Musica, Marlboro Orchestra directed by Alexander Schneider, with Rudolf Serkin, pianist, Boston Arts Quartet, New York Chamber Soloists, Beaux Arts Trio, Nova Arte Trio assisted by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and Gary Graffman, and the Kroll Quartet. Two of these programs, the Boston Arts Quartet's second program and the New York Chamber Soloists, were presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation. In addition to the New York Pro Musica's program of Early Renaissance Music, composers represented at these concerts included Vivaldi (5, Marlboro Orchestra), Mozart (4), Beethoven (3), Haydn (2), Brahms (2), Babbitt, Bartok, Berger, Carter, Diamond, Powell, Prokofiev, Schoenberg, Schuller, Stockhausen, Webern.

School of Music

Concurrently with the Berkshire Festival the Boston Symphony Orchestra maintains the Berkshire Music Center, its summer school of music at Tanglewood. The session this summer was the 20th since the Music Center was founded in 1940 — two years were omitted during the war. Richard Burgin was acting chairman of the faculty, replacing Aaron Copland who was on leave of absence. The Center had 270 students enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries.

When the Boston Symphony first played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000.

The Berkshire Festival in 1963 will open on July 5 and continue for eight weeks. The Berkshire Music Center will be in session from June 30, until Aug. 28.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

AUG 30 1962

Tanglewood Drew 217,642 Music Lovers This Year For $546,894

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood completed is 27th season Sunday with a total of 42 public events in eight weeks attended by 217,642 persons who paid $546,894.50 for tickets.

It was Dr. Charles Munch's 12th year as director of the festival and his final year as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When the Boston Symphony first played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000. The 1961 Berkshire Festival in seven weeks attracted more than 200,000 people.

The Berkshire Festival in 1963 will open July 5 and continue for eight weeks. The Berkshire Music Center will be in session from June 30, 1963 until Aug. 28, 1963.

Summer Music School

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, completed its 20th session Sunday and made awards to distinguished students. This summer 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries.

Awards were made to the following students: Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prizes, Louis Angelini of Utica, N. Y., and Volkmar Fritsche of Essex, West Germany; Gregor Piatigorsky Prize, Raphael Sommer of Israel; Raphael Sagalyn Award, Norman M. Dinnerstein of Springfield and Phillip C. Rhodes of Forest City, N. C.

Also Albert Spaulding Prize, Won - Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea; Samuel Wechsler Commission, Robert Newell of Berwick, Ill.; Leonard Bernstein Award, Louis Forner of Palo Alto, Cal.

Also Gertrude Robinson Smith Scholarship, Jean - Jacques Barbieux of Bruxelles, Belgium; Selly A. Eismann Memorial Scholarship, William Brent of Detroit, Mich.; Carlotta Dreyfus Scholarship, Daid H. Carroll of Tonawanda, N. Y.; Lydia Watson Hersloff Scholarship, Frank D. Reilly of Boston.

Also High Fidelity Magazine Scholarship, Christine Berl of New York City; and Arthur Abell Memorial Scholarship, Marjorie Ann Bacher of Greeley, Colo.

The 1963 season of the Berkshire Music Center, to run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, will open for an eight-week period June 30, 1963.

BLANK PAGE

212

STUDENT AWARDS.

213

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

AUG 27 1962

Dinerstein Wins Award At Tanglewood School

Norman M. Dinerstein of 19 Grosvenor St. was among eight winners of cash awards announced at the end of the Berkshire Music Center's season Sunday at Tanglewood.

The award winners are among the 270 music students, from 30 states and 16 foreign nations, who attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music in Lenox.

Dinerstein, 24, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dinerstein. A graduate of Classical High School, he attended the University of Massachusetts and was graduated from the School of Fine and Applied Arts, Boston University.

He is studying for a master's degree in music at the Julius Hartt School of Music, Hartford, Conn.

The prize, based on a composition he submitted, was the Raphael Sagalyn Award for best orchestral work in composition. He divided the prize with another winner, Phillip C. Rhodes of Forest City, N. C.

Louis Angelini of Utica, N. Y., and Volkmar Fritsche of West Germany won the Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition awards.

The Gregor Piatigorsky award for cellists went to Raphael Sommer of Israel.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea, concertmaster of the center's orchestra this summer, won the Albert Spaulding Prize for the outstanding instrumentalist, and Robert Newell of Berwick, Ill. won the Samuel Wechsler Commission for a composition student.

The Leonard Bernstein award for conducting went to Louis Forner of Palo Alto, Cal. Bernstein was a former student and faculty member of the school. The award was established this year.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Monday, August 27, 1962

Louis Angelini Wins Prize at Tanglewood

An original work by a young Utica composer highlighted the conclusion of the Berkshire Music Center's 20th session yesterday in Lenox, Mass.

Louis Angelini, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Angelini, 1303 Bleecker St., won a Koussevitzky Tanglewood composition prize for his selection "Scenes" for female voice, guitar, and percussion.

The $250 prize, given annually in memory of the former Boston Symphony conductor, recognizes new works of American students. The award is presented to summer students at Tanglewood.

A former piano student of Johannes Magendanz, Angelini has studied at Ithaca College and the Eastman School of Music. He is a candidate for the Ph. D. degree at Eastman with a major in composition. Last year he was appointed conductor of the Hillel Orchestra of Rochester.

LOUIS ANGELINI

The local composer has performed at the Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108

AUG 31 1962

Dinerstein Winner Of Composition Award

Norman Dinerstein, a teaching fellow at Hartt College of Music of the University of Hartford, has been awarded the Raphael Sagalyn award for orchestral composition at the Tanglewood music festival.

Dinerstein, who had been studying at Tanglewood under the Margaret Lee Crofts scholarship, received the award Aug. 24 from Lucas Foss, chairman of the composition department there.

A native of Springfield, Mass., Dinerstein received his bachelor of music degree in 1960 from Boston University. He has taught theory at Hartt for two years and is studying for his master's degree in composition.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 277,978 S. 450,991

SEP 3 1962

Local Man Wins Bernstein Award

Louis Forner, young Palo Alto conductor, has won this year's new Leonard Bernstein Award at the Berkshire Festival Music Center in Massachusetts.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 293,118

SEP 8 1962

Carroll Takes Berkshire Honors

DAVID H. CARROLL, a veteran bassoonist of 19 who looks back on his sessions as "extra man" with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra when he was 16, has been announced as one of a select group of award winners in the Berkshire Music Center.

David Carroll

The performer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn A. Carroll of 47 Surrey Circle, Town of Tonawanda, was chosen for the Carlotta Dreyfus Award by the center, part of the Berkshire Festival summer project in Tangfewood, Mass.

He also holds a Koussevitzky Fellowship and is on a full-tuition scholarship in the New England Conservatory, Boston, entering his junior year this fall.

Back home briefly before the start of a new school year, Mr. Carroll recalled filling in as a bassoonist with the Buffalo orchestra while attending Kenmore East High School and playing the bassoon and clarinet in school ensembles.

* * *

AND, THOUGH he just turned 19 in May, already he has been picked as "extra man" for programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regarded as one of the two or three finest symphonic ensembles of the world.

In a family of three boys and three girls, he is the second eldest and the lone professional musician, though brother Jeffrey, 12, plays the trombone.

* * *

IN THE WINTER season, Mr. Carroll is in steady demand. He is a member of the Pro Arte Woodwind Quintet and takes part in many other activities.

"You'd be surprised how much work there is for a bassoonist in the Boston area," he said. "A lot of one-nighters, chamber groups, 60-piece orchestras in the suburbs, light-music programs. It's enough to keep anyone busy."

Anyone, that is, who is good enough, at 19, to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—J. D.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128 581

SEP 13 1962

Composer Wins Prize

Louis Angelini, 448 Alexander St., a candidate for the Ph.D. degree in composition at Eastman School of Music, has won a Koussevitzky Tanglewood prize for his original composition at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass.

His selection "Scenes," for female voice, guitar and percussion, was awarded the $250 prize given annually in memory of the former Boston Symphony conductor.

NORTH CAROLINA EDUCATION
RALEIGH, N.C.
MONTHLY 30,181

NOV 1962

Phillip Carl Rhodes, public school music teacher in the Raleigh system, has won a nationwide competition in music composition at the famed Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. This prize marks the first time a Duke University graduate has won a major music composition competition of the magnitude of the Tanglewood Award.

Record-American(m)(e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

AUG 29 1962

Hub, Springfield Men Win Music Awards

A Boston and a Springfield man and the concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer were award winners in the Berkshire Music Center's 20th session.

This summer 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Frank D. Reilly, a violinist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra living at 98 Gainsboro st., Boston, received the Lydia Watson Hersloff Scholarship.

Norman M. Dinnerstein, 19 Grosvenor st., Springfield, a student of Witold Lutoslawski, divided the Raphael Sagalyn Award for the best orchestral work by students in the composition department with Philip C. Rhodes, Forest City, North Carolina, who studied with Iain Hamilton.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea, was the recipient of the Albert Spaulding Prize as the most promising and outstanding instrumentalist in the Music Center's student body. The prize is the income from a fund established by Mrs. Spaulding. Mr. Kim was concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer.

Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prizes were won by Louis Angelini, Utica, N. Y., and Volkmar Fritsche, Essex, West Germany.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060

SEP 2 1962

HONORS—Berkshire Music Center honored David H. Carroll, 47 Surrey Circle, Tonawanda, this past week by awarding him the Carlotta Dreyfus Scholarship. Carroll was a bassoonist at the Tanglewood Summer School in the student orchestra. This was a cash award, a part of a scholarship citation annually bestowed upon Berkshire students who have performed with distinction.

STUDENT AWARDS.

213

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

Dinerstein Wins Award At Tanglewood School

Norman M. Dinerstein of 19 Grosvenor St. was among eight winners of cash awards announced at the end of the Berkshire Music Center's season Sunday at Tanglewood.

The award winners are among the 270 music students, from 30 states and 16 foreign nations, who attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school [illegible] in Lenox.

Dinerstein, 24, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dinerstein. A graduate of Classical High School, he attended the University of Massachusetts and was graduated from the School of Fine and Applied Arts, Boston University.

He is studying for a master's degree in music at the Julius Hartt School of Music, Hartford, Conn.

The prize, based on a composition he submitted, was the Raphael Sagalyn Award for best orchestral work in composition. He divided the prize with another winner, Phillip C. Rhodes of Forest City, N. C.

Louis Angelini of Utica, N. Y., and Volkmar Fritsche of West Germany won the Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition awards.

The Gregor Piatigorsky award for cellists went to Raphael Sommer of Israel.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea, concertmaster of the center's orchestra this summer, won the Albert Spaulding Prize for the outstanding instrumentalist, and Robert Newell of Berwick, Ill., won the Samuel Wechsler Commission for a composition student.

The Leonard Bernstein award for conducting went to Louis Forner of Palo Alto, Cal. Bernstein was a former student and faculty member of the school. The award was established this year.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Monday, August 27, 1962

047

Louis Angelini Wins Prize at Tanglewood

An original work by a young Utica composer highlighted the conclusion of the Berkshire Music Center's 20th session yesterday in Lenox, Mass.

Louis Angelini, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Angelini, 1303 Bleecker St., won a Koussevitzky Tanglewood composition prize for his selection "Scenes" for female voice, guitar, and percussion.

The $250 prize, given annually in memory of the former Boston Symphony conductor, recognizes new works of American students. The award is presented to summer students at Tanglewood.

A former piano student of Johannes Magendanz, Angelini has studied at Ithaca College and the Eastman School of Music. He is a candidate for the Ph. D. degree at Eastman with a major in composition. Last year he was appointed conductor of the Hillel Orchestra of Rochester.

LOUIS ANGELINI

The local composer has performed at the Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
047
AUG 31 1962

Dinerstein Winner Of Composition Award

Norman Dinerstein, a teaching fellow at Hartt College of Music of the University of Hartford, has been awarded the Raphael Sagalyn award for orchestral composition at the Tanglewood music festival.

Dinerstein, who had been studying at Tanglewood under the Margaret Lee Crofts scholarship, received the award Aug. 24 from Lucas Foss, chairman of the composition department there.

A native of Springfield, Mass., Dinerstein received his bachelor of music degree in 1960 from Boston University. He has taught theory at Hartt for two years and is studying for his master's degree in composition.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 277,978 S. 450,991
SEP 3 1962

Local Man Wins Bernstein Award

Louis Forner, young Palo Alto conductor, has won this year's new Leonard Bernstein Award at the Berkshire Festival Music Center in Massachusetts.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 293,118
SEP 8 1962

Carroll Takes Berkshire Honors

DAVID H. CARROLL, a veteran bassoonist of 19 who looks back on his sessions as "extra man" with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra when he was 16, has been announced as one of a select group of award winners in the Berkshire Music Center.

David Carroll

The performer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn A. Carroll of 47 Surrey Circle, Town of Tonawanda, was chosen for the Carlotta Dreyfus Award by the center, part of the Berkshire Festival summer project in Tanglewood, Mass.

He also holds a Koussevitzky Fellowship and is on a full-tuition scholarship in the New England Conservatory, Boston, entering his junior year this fall.

Back home briefly before the start of a new school year, Mr. Carroll recalled filling in as a bassoonist with the Buffalo orchestra while attending Kenmore East High School and playing the bassoon and clarinet in school ensembles.

* * *

AND, THOUGH he just turned 19 in May, already he has been picked as "extra man" for programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regarded as one of the two or three finest symphonic ensembles of the world.

In a family of three boys and three girls, he is the second eldest and the lone professional musician, though brother Jeffrey, 12, plays the trombone.

* * *

IN THE WINTER season, Mr. Carroll is in steady demand. He is a member of the Pro Arte Woodwind Quintet and takes part in many other activities.

"You'd be surprised how much work there is for a bassoonist in the Boston area," he said. "A lot of one-nighters, chamber groups, 60-piece orchestras in the suburbs, light-music programs. It's enough to keep anyone busy."

Anyone, that is, who is good enough, at 19, to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—J. D.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,581
SEP 13 1962

Composer Wins Prize

Louis Angelini, 448 Alexander St., a candidate for the Ph.D. degree in composition at Eastman School of Music, has won a Koussevitzky Tanglewood prize for his original composition at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass.

His selection "Scenes," for female voice, guitar and percussion, was awarded the $250 prize given annually in memory of the former Boston Symphony conductor.

NORTH CAROLINA EDUCATION
RALEIGH, N.C.
MONTHLY 30,181
NOV 1962

Phillip Carl Rhodes, public school music teacher in the Raleigh system, has won a nationwide competition in music composition at the famed Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. This prize marks the first time a Duke University graduate has won a major music composition competition of the magnitude of the Tanglewood Award.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
AUG 29 1962

Hub, Springfield Men Win Music Awards

A Boston and a Springfield man and the concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer were award winners in the Berkshire Music Center's 20th session.

This summer 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Frank D. Reilly, a violinist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra living at 98 Gainsboro st., Boston, received the Lydia Watson Herscoff Scholarship.

Norman M. Dinnerstein, 19 Grosvenor st., Springfield, a student of Witold Lutoslawski, divided the Raphael Sagalyn Award for the best orchestral work by students in the composition department with Philip C. Rhodes, Forest City, North Carolina, who studied with Iain Hamilton.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea, was the recipient of the Albert Spaulding Prize as the most promising and outstanding instrumentalist in the Music Center's student body. The prize is the income from a fund established by Mrs. Spaulding. Mr. Kim was concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer.

Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prizes were won by Louis Angelini, Utica, N. Y., and Volkmar Fritsche, Essex, West Germany.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060
SEP 2 1962

HONORS—Berkshire Music Center honored David H. Carroll, 47 Surrey Circle, Tonawanda, this past week by awarding him the Carlotta Dreyfus Scholarship. Carroll was a bassoonist at the Tanglewood Summer School in the student orchestra. This was a cash award, a part of a scholarship citation annually bestowed upon Berkshire students who have performed with distinction.

214

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MOUNT VERNON ARGUS
Wednesday, August 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Wednesday, August 29, 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 43,126

AUG 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050

AUG 27 1962

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
ARGUS
D. 18,659

AUG 29 1962

Music Center Ends Season, Awards Prizes

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., completed its 20th session Sunday and awarded prizes to distinguished students. This summer, 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 countries.

Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition prizes were won by Louis Anglini of Utica and Volkmar Fritsche of West Germany. The Igor Piatigorsky Prize was awarded to Raphael Sommer of Israel, cellist.

Norman M. Dinnerstein of Springfield, Mass., and Philip C. Rhodes, Forest City, N.C., divided the Raphael Sagglyn Award for best orchestral work by students in the composition department.

The Albert Spaulding Prize to the outstanding instrumentalist in the student body went to Won-Mo of Seoul, Korea. Robert Newell of Berwick, Ill., was awarded the Samuel Wechsler Commission prize.

The Leonard Bernstein Award, new this year, was won by Louis Forner of Palo Alto, Calif.

Earlier this season, several tuition scholarship grants were awarded to outstanding students. They are Jean-Jacques Barbieux of Belgium, William Brent of Detroit, David Carroll of Tonawanda, N.Y., Frank D. Reilly of Boston, Mass., Christine Berl, of New York City and Marjorie Ann Bacher, Greeley, Colo.

The 1963 session of the Berkshire Music Center, to run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, will open for an eight week period on June 30, 1963.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

SEP 2 1962

Music

Tanglewood Awards Grants

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Two composers in residence at Tanglewood this summer reaped harvests in prizes for their students at the Berkshire Music Center.

The composers were Iain Hamilton of England and Witold Lutoslawski of Poland.

Of the 270 students from 30 states and 16 foreign countries, Volkmar Fritsche of Essex, West Germany (pupil of Hamilton), and Louis Angelini, Utica, N.Y. (pupil of Lutoslawski) won the Koussevitzky Tanglewood composition prizes.

The Raphael Sagalyn Award for the best orchestral by students in the composition department was divided by Norman M. Dinnerstein, Springfield, (Lutoslawski student), and Phillip C. Rhodes, Forest City, N.C. (Hamilton).

More than 60 per cent of the 270 students enrolled at the Center received full tuition grants. Very few of the remaining 40 per cent were able to meet the full extent of the music center's fees.

Contributing income for the center is derived from (1) a revolving scholarship fund which totalled $5,110 from 106 alumni this summer, (2) a number of established scholarships, (3) support from Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and (4) receipts from concerts by the Boston Pops Orchestra, and a Gala Evening by the students themselves.

The Pops and Gala benefits drew audiences of 15,009, or 670 more than 1961.

This summer's serious decline in Center income was from the Friends. There were 3,533 compared to 1961's 4,027. This made over $8,000 less income.

RAVINIA - TANGLEWOOD

Comparing attendance figures of Tanglewood's 1961 festival of seven weeks and the eight weeks of 1962 indicates that this summer's additional week increased the total by only 6,852 persons and $13,758.

The Berkshire figures remain impressive when matched with the recently concluded Ravinia festival in Illinois. The same seven-week period shows that there were 64,461 more persons at Tanglewood than Ravinia.

LAW VERSUS STRAUSS

Conductor Josef Krips should have consulted his lawyer before planning to give an authentic performance of Johann Strauss' "Auf der Jagd" at a recent Lewisohn Stadium concert in New York City.

When this polka was performed in Vienna, it was customary for a member of the audience to step forward and fire a rifle over the heads of the audience to dramatize "On the hunt."

The New York police were firmly opposed to firing the gun, citing Section 1906 of the Penal Law of New York City. They also questioned the possession of a gun within the city limits.

LEHAR AND SEX

August issue of Show Magazine poses the tangy question: "Who deserves the blame (or credit, depending on the viewpoint) for making musical comedies sexy?"

A writer for Show gives Franz Lehar ("Merry Widow") this dubious distinction. "Lehar's tunes," says Franz Spelman, "are elegant musical essays on passion. Masochistic rejection usually caused tears to flow by the end of Act Two. The Act Three reunions musically whipped up emotions to veritable orgiastic heights."

Spelman's research has been woefully lax. In the 18th Century, Handell wrote a "musical comedy called "The Faithful Shepherd," and Mozart, a "Marriage of Figaro," the stories of which make "Merry Widow" seem like a grammar school special.

In 1858, Jacques Offenbach wro a little "scene d'affairs" titled "Orpheus in the Underworld" that was banned in Paris for being naughty. It carried on for a record run of 228 performances.

CAPRICCIOUS TRISTAN

Bayreuthians were complete appalled at a performance of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" that was given at their recent festival in Germany.

Biggest cheat of all was that Isolde didn't die at the final curtain. Instead, she was supposed to have been "transfigured." In the same performance it developed that king Mark was Tristan's father, instead of his uncle.

And, Tristan and Isolde embraced in full view of King Mark and the audience during Act One. He's not even aware of their shenanigans until the second act.

What is this world of opera coming to? First thing you know Carmen will be fighting bulls and Escamillo will be working on the assembly line of some cigarette factory.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

SEP 9 1962

Student Award Winners

Pictured together at the conclusion of the Berkshire Music Center's season at Tanglewood with the retired Dr. Charles Munch are a few of the students who received awards. Left to right, Volkmar Fritsche of Essex, Germany, Norman Dinnerstein of Springfield, Robert Newell of Berwick, Ill., and Dr. Munch. Dinnerstein shared a composition prize.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,191

SEP 1 1962

win Awards

A Boston and a Springfield man and the concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer were award winners in the Berkshire Music Center's 20th session.

This summer 270 music students were enrolled from 30 states and 16 foreign countries in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Frank D. Reilly, a violinist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra living at 98 Gainsboro St., Boston, received the Lydia Watson Hersloff Scholarship.

Norman M. Dinnerstein, 19 Grosvenor St., Springfield, a student of Witold Lutoslawski, divided the Raphael Sagalvn Award for the best orchestral work by students in the composition department with Philip C. Rhodes, Foreta City, North Carolina, who studied with Iain Hamilton.

Won-Mo Kim of Seoul, Korea, was the recipient of the Albert Spaulding Prize as the most promising and outstanding instrumentalist in the Music Center's student body. The prize is the income from a fund established by Mrs. Spaulding. Mr. Kim was concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra this summer.

Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prizes were won by Louis Angelini, Utica, N. Y. and Volkmar Fritsche, Essex, West Germany.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ICA OBSERVER DISPATCH day, September 8, 1962

WINNERS AT TANGLEWOOD—Louis Angelini, 1303 Bleecker St., at right, was among winners of awards presented to musicians at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., at the recently-closed season. Pictured with him were, from left, Robert Newell, Berwick, Ill.; Charles Munch, Boston, festival director; Louis Forner, Palo Alto, Calif.; Phillip Rhodes, Forest City, N.C., and Angelini. Forner won an award as a student conductor; Newell, Rhodes and Angelini won honors as composers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 26 1962

Whitestone

STUDENT CONDUCTORS are congratulated by Richard Burgin, right, acting chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, following the first conductors' orchestra concert at Tanglewood Tuesday night. From the left are Louis Forner, Palo Alto, Calif.; Theodor Avitahl of Bucharest, Rumania; Pierre Hetu of Quebec, Canada; Serge Fournier of Paris, France; in front, Miss Satoko Takemae of Tokyo.

BLANK PAGE

216

RADIO & T.V.

217

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554

JUL 29 1962

Byron Janis will be the piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, to be heard on WPFM-FM, Saturday at 8:28 p.m. The program, recorded at Tanglewood on July 28, includes the Water Music Suite by Handel-Harty, Symphony No. 3 by Haieff and Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Minor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 614
AUG 2 1962

"Tanglewood" Concerts Are Heard Saturdays on WCRB

Concerts from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, "Tanglewood," scene of the annual Berkshire Music Festival, are heard Saturday nights at 8:25 p.m. in August, on the CRB Network.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 1 1962

WROW Will Broadcast Tanglewood Start Tonight

Highlights of today's opening ceremonies at the Berkshire Music Center, marking the start of the 1962 season at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, will be broadcast at 7:10 p.m. tonight on WROW's "Civic Profile" program.

Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch and concertmaster Richard Burgin, both of whom are retiring this year, will be among the speakers to be heard on the broadcast.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 886,367 S. 1,158,921

AUG 28 1962

NICK KENNY

WQXR Honors Charles Munch

MUSIC LOVERS will enjoy an orchestral portrait of Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be broadcast over WQXR in a special two-hour program Thursday from 8:05 to 10 p.m. Martin Bookspan, who has had a long association with the beloved conductor, will host the program.

Highlights of Dr. Munch's 13-year career as conductor and music director of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard along with comments by the members of the orchestra.

And so another grand old man of music puts away his baton to retire to the rustic life and the music of the barnyard.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

AUG 31 1962

BEGINNING Saturday evening, WSCH will broadcast regular concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the first two weeks of September the station will present recorded programs of this Summer's Tanglewood concerts, and later in the month live concerts from Symphony Hall in Boston.

Another program of live music from Boston will be the "New England Conservatory Concerts," broadcast Wednesday evenings at 8:30.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
D. 44,612

AUG 25 1962

FM Renews Concert Series

WSLS-FM Friday evening aired the second in its new series of evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as performed at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

The four-hour broadcasts open at 8 p.m. and are heard on Fridays. The program last evening and the one planned for next Friday are all-Mozart programs, with Charles Munch conductor.

The series extends through Nov. 23, the last concert marking the retirement of Dr. Munch.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,000
AUG 2 1962

"Tanglewood" Concerts Are Heard Saturdays on WCRB

Concerts from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, "Tanglewood," scene of the annual Berkshire Music Festival, are heard Saturday nights at 8:25 p.m. in August, on the CRB Network.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
ADVERTISER-DIGEST
W. 17,000

AUG 9 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
CITY LINE POST
W. 7,000

AUG 8 1962

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 11,677

AUG 27 1962

N.Y. TV Salutes Munch In Musical Profile Spec

An orchestral portrait of Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be aired on WQXR in a special two-hour program on Thursday, with Martin Bookspan, long associated with the conductor, as host. Musically, the program will feature some of the highlights of Dr. Munch's thirteen-year career as conductor and music director of the famous Boston Symphony. The comments will be heard by members of his orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554

SEP 9 1962

WPFM will begin a new series of stereophonic broadcasts featuring complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra on Sept. 18 and 22.

Starting Saturday, Sept. 22, WPFM will broadcast the regular Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf live and in stereo from Symphony Hall, Boston.

On Tuesday evenings at 8:30, starting Sept. 18, WPFM will carry stereophonic taped programs of concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

AUG 19 1962

Berkshire Festival Is Rebroadcast

A series of 15 rebroadcasts of concerts of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is being carried at 8:05 p.m. every Wednesday over KWFM. The festival concerts are a continuation of the rebroadcasts of the Boston Symphony concerts during the regular season.

The program to be heard Wednesday will be all-Mozart, led by Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony. It will contain the Divertimento in D, the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, "A Musical Joke" for strings and horns, and the Symphony No. 39.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Monday, October 8, 1962

RADIO & TV NEWS — By J. Don Schlaerth

Good Listening From Tanglewood Festival

BOSTON Symphony concerts, recorded during the summer at Tanglewood, a famous music center in Lenox, Mass., begin at 8:30 this evening on WBEN and WBEN-FM.

Pierre Monteaux, musical director of the Boston Symphony for many years and now associated with the London Philharmonic, conducted the Boston musicians in several summer concerts. Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2" will be among this evening's selections.

The first week in December, the regular winter series of Boston Symphony concerts will begin under the orchestra's new conductor, Eric Leinsdorf. These concerts should prove enjoyable to many Western New York radio listeners.

218

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Thursday, July 19, 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS — WQXR

Eleven conserts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Berkshire Music Festival to be broadcast over WQXR on Saturdays from 8:05 to 10 p. m. began Saturday July 14, and will continue through September 22. The concerts from the famous music center at Tanglewood, in Lenox. Mass., will be broadcast in FM Stereo and will have WQXR's Martin Bookspan as commentator. Charles Munch, who retires at the end of the Tanglewood season after thirteen years as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be heard as conductor in all of the WQXR broadcasts except one. On Sept. 8, Pierre Monteux will be broadcast over WQXR on Saturday, Sept. 22. It will include a performancce of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
APR 26 1963

Two separate concerts, recorded at the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be broadcast Saturday night at 8:25 over WGBH-FM and WCRB-AM-FM.

WCRB-AM-FM will broadcast, in stereo, a concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York. The trio includes pianist Menahem Pressler, violinist Daniel Guilet and cellist Bernard Greenhouse. They will perform music by Beethoven, David Diamond and Brahms.

WGBH-FM will repeat its Friday afternoon broadcast of a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch. This program includes works of Beethoven and Copland.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
SEP 2 1962

Good Music

Charles Munch's farewell concert at the Berkshire Festival as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2. Dr. Munch, who has directed the orchestra for 13 years, chose two of his favorite compositions for the program.

They are Aaron Copland's Quiet City, and a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Berkshire Festival Chorus. Soloists are Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 2 1962

FAREWELL CONCERT by Charles Munch (left) as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was taped by Ch. 2 for telecast this Tuesday from 8:30 to 10:15 p.m. Copland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony make up the program which took place at the Berkshire Festival last Sunday. Munch is shown here quite overwhelmed at the ovation given him at concert's end.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 2 1962

A special treat is in store for Ch 2 viewers Tuesday at 8:30 pm when Charles Munch's last concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony is telecast. The program was taped last Sunday and at concert's end, viewers will see an emotional Mr. Munch as he acknowledges the applause and enthusiasm of the audience at the Berkshire Festival.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
SEP 5 1962

On Television

Munch Farewell Relived on Ch. 2

By ARTHUR E. FETRIDGE

BEST FOR TONIGHT: Kennedy-McCormack Debate. Chs. 4-5 at 8. Ch. 7 at 11:15.

All the color of an emotion-packed farewell to a beloved conductor of a great symphony orchestra was caught for the viewers on Channel 2 last night when it presented Dr. Charles Munch's final direction of the Boston Symphony as its music director at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

It was the closing concert of the season on the Sunday afternoon of Aug. 26.

Dr. Munch was at his best and, unless the cameras lied, was as filled with emotion as was the huge crowd that watched him. Full face-on shots proved this as he literally gave everything he had to get the best from his musicians. They responded beautifully.

Every Mood Caught

Never before has a television audience been able to witness a Tanglewood concert. Last night four cameras caught every mood —of the large audience of the musicians and of the great conductor who was leaving his beloved orchestra.

Under the guidance of narrator William Pierce we were soundly briefed in all pertinent facts about the orchestra, its conductor and what we were about to hear. Since Robert Taylor, the Boston Herald's very astute music critic, did a magnificent job of reporting on the concert itself, we will leave that and devote ourself to what we saw on television.

It might be interesting to note that in order to get a full face close-up of Dr. Munch while he was conducting, Channel 2's director David Davis and producer Jordan Whitelaw hid a camera between the tympanies and the base drum and covered them so they blended with a black wall at the back of the stage.

Rarely has a television audience been brought closer to a conductor and his orchestra than it was last night for this Berkshire Festival concert.

Dr. MUNCH

While the audience obviously liked Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," which featured Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, it reserved its greatest appreciation for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. And well it might have, for it was here that Dr. Munch shone.

Superb View

Between pieces we were treated to a wonderful view of the audience milling about with the Berkshire hills in the background. It was a superb shot. But make no mistake, the milling stopped and everyone was in his seat when Dr. Munch came to the podium and picked up his baton.

It was a day of glory for Charles Munch and the more than 15,000 present did their level best to make it that and more.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

NOV 1 1962 Buffalo

Farewell of Munch

A tape recording of Charles Munch's farewell appearance as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be televised over Channel 5 on Thursday Nov. 22 (Thanksgiving Day), from 1:30 to 3:30 P.M. The concert was taped on Aug. 26 at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

The taping of the concert, which marked the first time a television camera had been permitted to the music festival, was done by educational station WGBH-TV in Boston. One camera was placed on stage in the percussion section of the orchestra and the cameraman masqueraded unobtrusively in the attire of the musicians.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

AUG 26 1962 Buffalo

CHARLES MUNCH — The conductor, whose Boston Symphony concerts appear Sundays, 8 P. M., on Channel 5, is the subject of a WQXR radio portrait, next Thursday from 8:05 to 10 P. M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
AUG 30 1962

BSO Finale On Channel 2

Dr. Charles Munch's final concert as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be telecast next Tuesday, Sept. 4 at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

Program will include Copand's "Quiet City," with Roger Voisin as trumpet soloist and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, bass.

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND